Three Teen-Age Boys Saved From Abandoned Mine

Crawl 2,000 Feet to Safety;
All in Satisfactory Condition

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Three teen-age boys crawling some 2,000 feet to safety, were rescued from an old abandoned coal mine Saturday after being missing since Thursday.

The boys were rushed to St. Clair Memorial Hospital where the father of one said:

Good Condition

A hospital spokesman said Abbott and O'Kain were in good condition while Burke was satisfactory. All were admitted for observation. The spokesman said Burke's chest would be X-rayed to determine if he was sick or injured.

Inspector Everett Turner of the U.S. Bureau of Mines credited the discovery of a firecracker with leading rescuers to the boys in the mine containing lethal black damp gas.

"About two hours before we found them," Turner told a newsman, "we had indications they were in the mine. Jennings Breddon and Jim Hutchens found a firecracker. They reported to me and I went on in."

The inspectors crawled and dragged themselves some 2,000 feet to the boys, then had breathing apparatus brought to the trio.

No Flashlights

Abbott told newsmen at the hospital their flashlights went out about five minutes after they entered the mine Thursday.

"It was dark in there," he said. "We were scared and nervous. We seemed to get further and further from the entrance."

Asked what had happened Abbott said:

"We made the wrong turn. We got lost."

Turner and Hutchens reached the boys after three days of exhausting searching in the mine in suburban Castle Shannon.

Before the discovery of the firecracker, officials felt the boys were not in the mine although the

Demonstrations
Resumed Monday

CAMBRIDGE, Md. (AP)—Negro leaders, defying the National Guard's ban on demonstrations, served notice Saturday night they will resume street marches Monday in an effort to break down racial barriers.

"Our people are restless. They want their freedom and they are determined to acquire those legitimate rights which have been too long denied them," said a statement issued by the Cambridge Nonviolent Action Committee.

The committee is headed by Mrs. Gloria Richardson, militant integrationist leader.

Marchers Dispersed

What will happen when the National Guard confronts the demonstrators remains to be seen. Friday night about 250 marchers dispersed when Brig. Gen. George M. Gelson quietly notified them they would be violating militia law, invoked by Gov. J. Millard Tawes.

There were indications that Monday's demonstration might be a repeat performance of this, but that the integrationists would later press their drive in such a way that the Guard officers might feel impelled to arrest them.

Their statement Saturday night praised the Guard for its "im-

'Million Dollar Rain' Falls on Arid Wisconsin

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A "million dollar rain" fell on Wisconsin today.

The slow, soaking rain fell on most parts of the state to end a prolonged dry spell which had threatened to dry out oat fields, shrivel corn and cut hay crops to a minimum.

"It was just what the doctor ordered," State agricultural statistician Clarence D. Caparoon said at Madison. "It was worth more than a million dollars."

The rain was heaviest in the south and western parts of the state where it was needed most. The northern half of Wisconsin has been more fortunate and has not been too parched.

Caparoon said that the slow gentle rains benefited crops much more than brief heavy precipitation that often accompanies thunderstorms.

UW Scientist Reported Ill On Ice Island

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) — A University of Wisconsin scientist was reported Saturday to be ill with pneumonia on a floating ice island in the Arctic Ocean.

The illness of Jay Hirschman of the University's Geophysical and Polar Research Center was diagnosed by a doctor on the basis of information received by radio while flying over the island.

The island, Arliss II, is occupied by a nine-man scientific team supported by the Arctic Research Laboratory at Pt. Barrow.

The plane could not land because the island's airstrip was slushy, but medical supplies were dropped.

The doctor flew to the area Wednesday after a radio message that Hirschman was sick was received at Pt. Barrow. Radio contact was poor and no details could be learned? The island is 1,000 miles northwest of Pt. Barrow.

$5 Million AAL Expansion Highlight of 15-Year Dream

Addition to Appleton Building Will be Done by Early in 1965

BY PATRICK MCELHINNEY
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Aid Association for Lutherans proposed plans for a $5 million addition to its present home office building in Appleton representing the culmination of a 15-year dream.

Preliminary planning for the new building, scheduled to be completed in late 1965 or early 1966, was undertaken when planning for the present structure was begun about 15 years ago.

The present entrance and lobby are expressing the view privately in the 3½-year-old work rules dispute.

However, many lawmakers are expressing the view privately that only a strike itself can prod Congress into taking quick action on a compulsory arbitration proposal.

An extremely reliable source close to the President emphasized that Mr. Kennedy has not yet decided on the legislation he will propose.

But drafts with varying combinations of alternatives, have been drawn, he acknowledged.

And the formula for "medi-

tion is completed, basic working drawings show.

The new portion is intended to be a mirror image of the present structure on the outside and, with a few exceptions, on the inside. It will occupy the site of the building at W. College Avenue and N. Superior Street.

The company is making every possible effort to match the appearance of the new building with the existing structure. Special brick will be used to match the shading of the older brick.

Some materials from the present structure will be used in the new portion. Spandrels on the west windows will be placed on the front facing College Avenue to assure an identical match of material and weather appearance throughout the combined structure.

Doubles Space
Floor space of the present building will be more than doubled when the new portion is completed. To AAL's present office space of 78,770 square feet, approximately 92,000 square feet will be added. The present structure measures 80 by 150 feet on the exterior, minus a 23 by 50 foot recess on the building's northwest corner.

The new structure will measure 67 by 150 feet and will close in the recess above the first floor. There will be approximately 9,200 square feet of net useable floor space on each floor of the new portion of the structure.

In addition to the extra space that will be acquired when the court is closed in, more space will be available because the floor space in the new portion

Russian Communist Party Says Ideas on War, Peace 'Diametrically Opposed'

BY PRESTON GROVER

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Communist Party declared today the Russian and Chinese views on war and peace remain diametrically opposed. The Russians charged that Chinese representatives are aggravating Soviet-Chinese differences at their current peace talks in Moscow.

In a sweeping indictment of Red China's policies in communist and world affairs, the Soviet Party also accused Peking of trying to worsen U. S.-Soviet relations and heat up the cold war.

The Russians stopped short, however, of an open break with the Chinese, indicating the Kremlin would wait for Red China to make any such move.

"The immediate future," the Soviet statement declared, "will show if the Chinese comrades agree to build our relations on the basis of what unites and not disunites us."

Door Held Open

Red China declared Saturday it did not want a break with Moscow, and held open the door for a resumption of talks if the present ones fail.

The Soviet Party central committee berated the Communist Chinese leadership in a 35,000-word open letter addressed to "all the communist parties" of the world. It was published in Sunday's issue of the Soviet Party newspaper Pravda, taking up more than four full pages, and was distributed by the Soviet news agency Tass.

The statement was issued a few hours after Deputy Premier Anastas I. Mikoyan, often the Kremlin's chief troubleshooter, took a hand in the faltering talks. Mikoyan's role in Saturday's session was not known, but there was speculation he might have been seeking a face-saving way to break off the talks with the Chinese before the Russians sit down Monday with U.S. and British representatives to discuss a nuclear test-ban treaty.

U.S. Assailed

Red China meanwhile accused the United States of making every effort to disrupt the Soviet-Chinese talks and said Washington is aiming at a general counting on a Moscow-Peking by similar figure, perhaps a bit lower and with more of the cut

A Peking statement declared that "the imperialists headed by the United States... are beside themselves with rage and hatred."

Tax Discussion To be Resumed

House Committee Close Mouthed on Kennedy Package

WASHINGTON (AP)—The off-again, on-again machinery Congress uses to write tax legislation starts up again Monday.

If the House Ways and Means Committee keeps it turning, the rest of Congress—and the taxpayers—may get a look in about two weeks at the kind of tax cut the legislators will be asked to vote on somewhat later.

Committee leaders are close mouthed. Accordingly a multibillion-dollar guessing game is in full swing on Capitol Hill. For those who want to play, here are some materials:

President Kennedy set for Congress the target of a tax reduction amounting ultimately to somewhat more than $10 billion annually, to be reached in three steps.

Similar Figure

There is reason to believe the committee is aiming at a general counting on a Moscow-Peking by similar figure, perhaps a bit lower and with more of the cut coming sooner. In any case, it is expected to propose some reduction effective Jan. 1, 1964.

But the congressional tax writers already have shown plainly they do not intend to follow the executive blueprint in detail.

Kennedy proposed a deep cut in rates. Instead of the present 20-to-91-per-cent range on individual incomes, he suggested 14-to-65 percent, and instead of 52 percent on corporations 47 percent. This would have meant reducing revenues by about $13.5 billion. But he proposed also tax revisions—called by some advocates "retiree junta" which has taken forms—that would have recouped more than $3 billion of the revenue.

Congressional Approval Uncertain

Threatened Compulsory Arbitration Probable Kennedy Scheme to Head Off Rail Walkout

BY CHARLES NICODEMUS
Chicago Daily News Service

WASHINGTON — The administration has virtually settled already on the broad outline of legislation it will submit to Congress July 22 to head off the threatened nationwide rail strike.

The formula that almost certainly will be sought would cover this dispute only and call for another fixed "cooling off" period of mediation—probably 30 days—backed up by the threat of compulsory arbitration if the mediation fails.

However there is absolutely no certainty in the White House that this—or any other proposal embodying compulsory arbitration—can win congressional passage in the one week's time (July 22-29) allotted under the current timetable.

Then... A Strike

And if a law isn't passed in that period, "then there will be a strike," one presidential adviser said.

"We have nothing else up our sleeve," he added. It was also disclosed that the main purpose of the President's special six-man fact-finding committee is not to prepare a report for White House use; the President already believes he has enough facts to background his recommendations.

Instead, the report will be primarily for the consumption of Congress and the public—which President Kennedy believes strongly have never really grasped the breadth of issues in the 3½-year-old work rules dispute.

Hasn't Decided

An extremely reliable source close to the President emphasized that Mr. Kennedy has not yet decided on the legislation he will propose.

But drafts with varying combinations of alternatives, have been drawn, he acknowledged.

And the formula for "medi-

tion with the threat of arbitration" reportedly is far ahead in the favor of virtually every adviser and congressional leader who has the President's ear.

Presidential aides believe that such a two-step formula would very likely produce a settlement during the first step: mediation.

"If the five operating brotherhoods (unions) and management know what all the cards are ahead of time—and they've never known this before—there is a strong chance that a settlement could be negotiated," an administration spokesman predicted.

The identity of the mediators

23,000 Cars Travel Over Bridge Daily

Traffic Loads on Memorial Drive Add to Congestion

The Memorial Drive bridge is anything but traffic shy.

An official traffic count has indicated an average of 23,000 cars a day travel across the stately bridge.

The source for the statistical matter is City Planner - Engineer Walter Rasmussen in a recent report to the common council's public safety committee.

Peak traffic loads are carried on the bridge from 3 to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturdays. The two-lane thoroughfare has a 33 foot width.

For comparison's sake, there is considerably more traffic over the Memorial Drive bridge than on U. S. 41 between Highways 125 and 150 from Neenah to Appleton. The daily count in that area was 14,000 vehicles.

Congestion Problem

All of the information on the bridge traffic ties in with the problem of vehicular congestion which exists at the Prospect Avenue and Memorial Drive intersection. The intersection will be widened soon, and new traffic signals installed at a cost of about $12,000.

Rasmussen reports that during the 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. period on Memorial Drive, 990 northbound vehicles go straight, 252 turn right and 98 make left turns.

Vehicles southbound on Memorial Drive make 13 left turns, 63 right turns and 834 continue straight.

Rasmussen has proposed there be four traffic lanes east and west of the Prospect-Memorial intersection and a change in the timing signals as suggested by the state highway commission.

"Because of the heavy traffic passing through the intersection, we have to be careful how we monkey with those signals," Rasmussen commented.

After the intersection is widened, a determination will be made as to whether "left turn" arrows should be installed.

Police Hunt Boat, Motor Taken in Oshkosh Theft

OSHKOSH — A boat and motor were stolen from an Oshkosh boat shop Saturday afternoon, according to city police.

The craft, a 14-foot red, white and blue Thompson with a 12 horsepower Seabee motor, was taken from the Hergert Boat Shop, 1232 Sawyer Ave., sometime since Friday, police said.

The boat was owned by Bruce Ehle, 1018 Coolidge Ave., and was taken from the boat shop where it had been undergoing repairs.

A police search of the area did not turn up the missing craft. The boat's license number is WS 5620 AB.

Boating equipment totaling $38 was reported stolen from another craft owned by Harry Harndt, 229 W. 16th Ave., Saturday morning. The boat was moored under Eddie's Sport Shop, 3 N. Main St., police said.

Missing were a gas tank, a pair of sunglasses, and a tool box containing assorted tools.

Police believed the theft occurred sometime between July 7 and 13.

A boat parked at the foot of the Michigan Street bridge was reported damaged by vandals sometime last week Oshkosh police, who received the complaint Friday, said a windshield valued at $50 was broken.

Carried the Ball

Mediator Despins Had Big Role in K-C Settlement

BY WILLIAM C. CAREY
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Genial James A. Despins has been handling labor-management "hot potatoes" for the past 20 years and still is going strong with the U. S. Mediation and Conciliation Service.

Despins' talent as a federal mediator was in the limelight in recent weeks when he assisted officials of the Kimberly - Clark Corp. and two of its AFL-CIO affiliated unions to reach agreement on a new contract.

It wasn't easy, but as Despins put it, "I would not say it was the toughest assignment I have ever had."

Despins recalled that he had "survived" the Kohler Co. negotiations, covering the firm's two major labor disputes over a period of several years.

The 58-year-old Despins arrived at Neenah the last week in June after company and union officials had broken off negotiations and things were generally considered in a state of shambles.

It was but a matter of a few days and Despins had the show back on the road and negotiations resumed under terms of a mutual moratorium.

The task of the federal mediator is an ulcer - provoking one in every instance. The mediator does not take sides—he attempts to assist both sides and strives to keep the door open to compromise.

No Authority
Despins, like any other federal mediation commissioner, has no authority to make any party in a dispute abide by his wishes, but he constantly strives for mutual agreements which are binding so that across - the - table talks can proceed in an orderly manner.

In the Kimberly - Clark dispute, representatives of both labor and management have indicated their mutual respect for Despins who is firm but fair and still manages to maintain a sense of humor, which doesn't hurt a bit either.

"As for the ulcers, I'm happy to say that I don't belong to the club," Despins commented.

Although not fully understood by the general public, his field is a highly specialized one. The annual pay of a commissioner can range from $11,000 to $14,000.

Year-Around Job

Despins' year-around job is to assist in the settlement of labor-management disputes. Every new contract session in which Despins is called in represents another new challenge regardless of the size of the dispute or the participants.

Mediators like Despins always are optimistic—they have to be, because often no one else is and objectivity gets lost in the shuffle. Needless to say, the K-C contract talks were most complicated and much was gained by shifting a portion of them to Chicago. Despins handled the show alone although the Chicago regional directors stood by just in case.

Some Take Turns

That Despins was able to carry the ball throughout the trying ordeal reflects his ability as a commissioner. In many disputes it is necessary to call in teams of mediators who take turns at trying to find an opening that might lead to the long road to mutual understanding and agreement.

Despins will be the first to admit that in the K-C negotiations or any other disputed situation, there is always a crucial point which makes things touch-and-go. Getting the parties to agree to a moratorium and a short cooling off period was probably Despins' daily reports to the press.

on the progress of negotiations were tense and to the point, and not until authorized to do so did he speak for either party.

Labor Background

Despins, born in Marinette May 20, 1905, has had a full labor background. Prior to becoming a member of the U. S. Mediation and Conciliation staff, he was on the Michigan State Mediation

Police Advise One Last Check

Vacationers Beware of Sneak Thieves

BY RAY PY

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

"I can't understand how it happened," one unhappy vacationer recently complained to police when she discovered her home had been entered by burglars. "Everyone in the neighborhood knew we were gone."

"Everyone in the neighborhood," probably included the "cat" burglar, the "sneak thief" or the "second story" man whose busy season begins during the early weeks of the annual vacation season.

In anticipation of an increase in the number of home break-ins, local police agencies are appealing to homeowners to take one last look around before turning the house key and heading for far away places.

The burglar has no better informant than the talkative housewife who "spills" her family's vacation plans in the supermarket, the beauty parlor or the coffee shop.

Vacation plans are best left undisclosed throughout the neighborhood, police say, and as little as possible be let out as to when you are leaving and how long you plan to stay.

Take a close friend or a neighbor into your plans, but avoid discussing the trip in the presence of strangers.

Avoid Newspapers
Above all, avoid making formal announcements in the newspapers about your trip until you have returned. The successful burglar or sneak thief is an avid reader of the society page.

The house burglar, unlike his more determined counterpart, the safecracker, will take the quickest and easiest path to his booty. Seldom do police find a home that has been entered through force. Often an open window, a long-broken pane of glass, an unlocked door or even an open milkchute provide all the entry needed.

doors and windows. Make a careful check of seldom-used basement windows which may have been left open.

Works Swiftly
Once inside the home, the burglar works

swiftly, seeking cash left in sugar bowls, desk drawers, piggy banks and cups and jars. Jewelry from boxes in bedrooms and small appliances which can easily be sold without suspicion also are prizes for the house thief.

The Suspicious Stranger in this posed photograph may be keeping an eye on your vacant home while you are on vacation. Don't foster an open door policy. It may lead to trouble, police warn. (Post-Crescent Photo by Ralph Acker)

Catholics to Mark 100th Year of Shrine

Solemn Ceremonies Set for Holy Hill Centennial Program

Solemn ceremonies marking the official celebration of the Holy Hill centennial will be Tuesday, the feast day of Our Lady of Mount Carmel.

The 10 a. m. solemn high mass will be highlighted by the presence of archdiocesan, diocesan and Discedal Carmelite dignitaries. Archbishop William E. Cousins will preside in Cappa Magna while Bishop William P. O'Connor, Madison, will preach.

The ceremonies mark the first visit of Archbishop Cousins to Holy Hill since completion of the $1 million expansion of the shrine facilities. Many church dignitaries are also expected to attend the observance which will be open to the public.

Historically, the present shrine site was under the direction of the Milwaukee archdiocese until 1906 when Archbishop Sebastian Messmer invited the Discedal Carmelites to assume the direction of the site. Previously, priests from the surrounding area of Hubertus and Hartford were in charge.

The present buildings at Holy Hill have been built since the arrival of the Discedal Carmelites. The original wooden monastery was razed during the 1962 expansion.

It is estimated that over 10 million people and tourists have visited Holy Hill, mostly in the past 25 years. In recent years the shrine has attracted over 100,000 visitors.

The addition of twin elevators are expected to substantially increase attendance in the future.

Oshkosh Finds 10 Cases of Dutch Elm Disease in Area

City, County Officials Plan Measures to Halt Advance

OSHKOSH — Ten cases of Dutch elm disease in Winnebago County already have been confirmed, and laboratory tests are pending on 14 suspect cases to see if these trees also have the disease, the county agent's office has announced.

Informational meetings will be held this week for city and town officials, park and cemetery personnel and tree trimmers and surgeons to acquaint them with the detection and control of Dutch elm disease.

The meetings will be conducted by Lawrence Fenton of the State Department of Agriculture and County Agent Vernon W. Perout-

The meetings will be at 9:30 a.m. Monday at Menominee Park in Oshkosh, at 2:30 p.m. Monday at the Omro city hall, at 8:30 a.m. Tuesday at the Neenah city hall, at 8:30 a.m. Wednesday at the Memorial Building in Menasha and at 8 a.m. Thursday at the Winconne village hall. After each meeting, Fenton will be available for personal services.

Purpose of the meetings is to present the status of Dutch elm disease and discuss control measures which might be undertaken by communities. Information will be given to help the communities cope with the situation if they have no method of burning the wood.

Test Carry-Over
The State Department of Agriculture is making a survey of the carry-over effectiveness of sprayed materials used last fall or early this spring. They are testing trees sprayed to learn if anything is left in them to kill the beetles.

Of the 10 trees already confirmed as having Dutch elm disease this year, five are south of Oshkosh, four are in Oshkosh and one is west of Neenah. Last year the county had 11 diseased trees of which four were in Oshkosh, six in the Town of Black Wolf south of Oshkosh and one in the Town of Oshkosh.

Most of the 14 suspect cases where laboratory tests now are being conducted are in the Oshkosh and surrounding area. One is in Menasha.

Diseased Area
Most of the diseased trees are in a confined area and in the general vicinity where cases existed previously.

There is an indication that some affected trees are harboring these beetles and serving as a source of infection in healthy trees, Donald J. Tripp, assistant county agent, indicated.

The only way to determine if a tree is diseased, he said, is through a laboratory test by the State Department of Agriculture at Madison. This test is done on the fungus specimens from the suspect tree. A card is sent to the tree owner as well as to the city administrator or county extension officer indicating the results of the test.

State Law
Where a tree has been found to be diseased with Dutch elm disease, the owner under state law must remove that tree and have it burned within 30 days after re-restored cars will be on display and competing for trophies and cash prizes. Additional entries had to be turned down because of lack of display space, club members said. This is more than triple the number of entries at the first show last summer.

Entries have been received from all over the Midwest and from as far as Kansas.

Miss Valerie Kluge, first runner up in the Miss Oshkosh contest, will reign over the show as "Miss Car Style" and will cut the ribbon to open the show at 11 a.m. Saturday. Show hours are from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. Saturday and from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Sunday.

Very few of these "hot rods" are driven on the streets but are entered mainly in show competition. Owners have put as much as $8,000 in time and materials in customizing the vehicles.

Classes of competition range from unfinished custom to radical custom, competition roadster, dragster and go karts. There are 19 classes in all. In addition to trophies for each class, there are prizes for best paint, best upholstery, best engine compartment, best engineered, best single car display, best club display, best appearing crew and long distance award.

The car voted best of the show receives a $100 prize and a $50 award goes to the most popular car as voted by spectators. Prizes of $50 each also go to the best rod and the best custom car.

Three Added to St. Elizabeth Hospital Staff

Three new members have been added to the staff of St. Elizabeth Hospital, and three members of the hospital's religious community have left.

Newcomers are Sister Mary Kenneth, dietician; Mrs. William Melzer, R.P.T., staff therapist; and Miss Rose Marie Jantv, bookkeeper in the accounting department.

Members who left recently are Sister Mary Catherine, who went to the motherhouse at Wheaton, Ill., for a new assignment; Sister Mary Candida, who came to St. Elizabeth's in 1923, who left for St. Anthony Hospital, St. Louis, Mo.; and Sister Mary Liboria, who also left for the St. Louis hospital after being at St. Elizabeth's since 1929.

Sister Kenneth is visiting the motherhouse. During her absence Miss Judith St. John, a 1963 graduate of Cardinal Stritch College, Milwaukee, will assist in the dietary department.

Mrs. Melzer formerly worked at Theda Clark Hospital, Neenah, and St. Vincent Hospital, Green Bay.

Oshkosh Murder Case Baffling

Authorities Question Over 50 Persons About Pratt Stabbing

BY DON CASTONIA
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

OSHKOSH — One month has passed since the baffling and brutal murder of gasoline service station operator Wayne Pratt. Authorities confess they are no closer to the solution of the crime today than they were 32 days ago the morning after the senseless killing.

More than 50 persons have been questioned since the killing and an even greater number of leads run down. Each has led to a blank wall. Investigators Richard Guenther and Wilbur Fuller have worked fulltime on the case and will continue to do so. Sheriff Richard "Bud" Lowell said, "The 24-year-old Pratt was stabbed and slashed 53 times with a knife and struck on the head with a shovel by an assailant or assailants around 9 p.m. the night of June 12 in his isolated station on U. S. 41 about four miles north of Oshkosh."

"If we only had a definite motive," Lowell said. While definitely saying so, authorities have downgraded robbery as a motive. Investigation has shown that only about $80 was taken, not $200 as originally thought, Lowell said.

All known knife wielders in the state have been checked out, the sheriff added. He said several Michigan service station murders were checked but there was no similarity. A man in Detroit was questioned when he was found carrying a clipping from a newspaper of the crime but he too was cleared.

Four men arrested near Racine for a filling station robbery were questioned but, again, no connection was found.

Lowell said that when he was in Los Angeles 12 weeks ago to pick up a prisoner he spent time with Biemerdt St. Green Bay, home he Los Angeles police going over the murders they have investigated to see if they could determine what type of person would have done the stabbing.

None Like This But, he said, in their history they never had a killing like this one.

Authorities are hoping something will turn up when the State Crime Laboratory completes its investigation. No report has been received on finger prints found at the scene or on the other physical evidence gathered.

"The crime lab is overburdened with cases," Lowell said, "and we have to wait our turn. The FBI and other authorities are still seeking a man who walked away from Winnebago of June 12 in his isolated station on U. S. 41 about four miles north of Oshkosh."

He has been ruled out as a suspect in the case because it has definitely been proved he passed a worthless check in Neenah about the same time the killing took place.

Firemen's Daily Task Training for Major Job of Fire-Fighting

'Needless Routine' Changes to Automatic Action in Emergency

A man who spends the better part of his working day learning to carry ladders is either a ladder salesman or a fireman.

Seldom Varies While he is on his shift, the fireman is a housewife, gardener, a mechanic and a maintenance man. He helps cook his food, makes his bed and keeps his station and equipment in top shape.

The routine seldom varies. Each fireman is responsible to see that his personal equipment is taken from his locker and placed at his position on the truck he is assigned.

After a small breakfast, chores are done. If a fire was fought during the night, hoses must be cleaned, equipment repaired, reports written, and the fire trucks scrubbed and cleaned.

Attend Classes During lulls the men play cards, read and talk. Often classes are held, and each day during good weather, training sessions are held at various training sites.

Appleton's Fire Department will begin training on the site of the new fire station. On the site are some older homes and buildings the men will use for ladder practice. During the summer, ladder practice is conducted at the Morgan School.

Training is scheduled to keep the men busy, alert and physically fit.

Much Exertion A hard-fought fire similar to the fire at the Konz Box Co. in Appleton, would take its toll among the men if they were not kept physically fit.

"Fighting a fire probably takes day which in effect, is an extra person puts on in an entire week. To snap from a relaxed attitude to that of a good fire fighter in only a short time could be disastrous when he leaves the fireman's body was not fit," the training officer said.

Appleton's Fire Department is manned with 79 firefighters, one short of its 80 man requirement. By the end of the summer, the strength will be increased to 86.

Test With Veterans "I'll have the new men for two weeks to a month. During that time they will learn all about the ladders, the trucks and how to control fires," Luebben said.

"Trainees", unlike the older men, work an 8-hour day and are not taken to the fires. When they are "graduated," they will be placed on a shift and transferred to one of four stations located in the city. Their training will not decrease, but they will take their regular 24-hour shifts and will be tested with the veterans when the alarm sounds.

Hold Horse Show At Brillion Stable BRILLION — The Silver Spur Riding Club will sponsor a horse show at Al Miller's Lazy Acre Stable near Brillion, today. The event will mark the first official public function of the new riding club.

Members of the Silver Spur club, the Branch River club and the Rim Rock Riders of St. Nazianz will participate in the show. The public is invited, with no admission charged.

The events were scheduled to open at 10 a.m. The classes in the show include open model jr., open model sr., parade class, western pleasure horse jr., pole bending, egg and spoon, clover-leaf barrels, western pleasure horse sr., costume class, musical hats, balloon breaking and speed and action.

Judge of the events will be John Sarns of Little Suamico. Ringmasters will be Reeve Winkler, Delman Richter and Ed Arps. Allan Kalies and Harland Schwartz will be masters of ceremonies. Mrs. Jerry Bontlicher and Mrs. Schwartz are in charge of registration and the Brillion Jaycees are in charge of refreshments, entry blanks and programs.

Customark Honors Firm For Sales

Woelz Paper Co. Sells Over 100 Orders Of New Product

Woelz Paper Co. of Appleton, Milwaukee, and Madison was honored at a dinner held at Appleton's Butte des Morts Country Club recently by the officers of Customark Corp., Appleton manufacturer of private watermarked papers.

A private watermark is a firm's or individual's own name or design incorporated into the paper in place of the brand names usually found in writing papers.

The occasion honored the Woelz Paper Co. in having been the first of more than 150 paper merchants in the United States and Canada to sell 100 such orders since the formation of Customark Corp. in 1960.

In presenting a plaque commemorating the achievement to Fred Holzkecht, president, and John W. Lally, vice president of Woelz, Customark's president R. F. Bellack commented: "When a relatively small organization, through hard-hitting salesmanship, comes in ahead of nearly 170 similar companies most of which are four to five times its size they are certainly to be congratulated. But at the same time this is a compliment to the progressiveness of Wisconsin businessmen who are quick to grasp the promotional and protective value of private watermarks more quickly than those of any other state."

Presenting the plaque were Customark's president R. F. Bellack, vice president John W. Lally, and Fred Holzkecht, president of Woelz.

To be Self-Supporting

Ladies Benevolent Society Still Hoping to Accomplish Major Goal

OSHKOSH — The Ladies Benevolent Society has accomplished several of its aims during the 100 years of its existence and hopes that one day its present major aim can be accomplished. In 1890 a home was secured and it was opened as "The home for the friendless." A name changed.

As outlined by Mrs. Carlton Foster, treasurer and a board member for more than 30 years, that aim is to become self-supporting. The Ladies Benevolent Society operates a home for aging women and its budget is supplemented by the Oshkosh area United Fund.

The society has had many benefactors in past years and has been named for trust bequests which it will receive upon the deaths of relatives of those persons remembering the society in their wills.

$25,000 Request One of the latest bequests has been $25,000 left by a California man in memory of his mother-in-law, a former Oshkosh resident, which the society will receive upon the death of the donor's wife.

All of these gifts, as well as the entrance fees paid by the women who become residents of the ladies benevolent society home, are put into trust funds with the interest used for operation of the residence home for aging women.

Nineteen women reside at the home in addition to five staff members who are the matron, cook, practical nurse and two maids.

Not Always Filled Though now the home is filled to capacity, such has not always been the case though. Back in 1878 the society raised a small daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Nye, Hortonville, Avenue and hired a matron. But no one would reside in it.

A committee visited various possible residents for the home, but to no avail. One woman, complete at Melsau Funeral Home, according to minutes of the society, Hamilton Square.

Former Post-Crescent Correspondent Dies Mrs. Milton Ullerich, Hamilton Square, N. J., a former resident of New London, died Thursday at Hamilton Square.

Mrs. Ullerich, a former Post-Crescent correspondent for the New London area, was the well-known recording secretary; Mrs. E. R. Dickman, financial secretary; Mrs. Carlton Foster, treasurer; Mrs. Hugo Eckhart, auditor; and Mrs. Norbert Vette, Mrs. O. R. Jones, Mrs. D. E. McCray, Mrs. Lawrence Perkins, Mrs. Lester Barton and Mrs. Henry Klein-schmitt, board members.

Mrs. Myrtle Pettit, Oshkosh, recently was named matron for the home to succeed Mrs. Edna Tice who retired because of ill health after being matron for more than 25 years.

The home is mainly a residence home for aging women rather than a long-term skilled nursing home. It does have a practical nurse in residence. To be eligible for admission, women must be 65 years of age or older and ambulatory. Women from Winnebago County and the surrounding area are preferred for residence. The residents are cared for during their illnesses by the society.

Nearly 200 women from the Oshkosh area now belong to the Ladies Benevolent Society. Officers are Mrs. Fred Kuebler, president; Mrs. F. L. Conroy, first vice president; Mrs. E. J. Arps, second vice president; Miss Ann Rockwell, recording secretary; Mrs. E. R. Dickman, financial secretary; Mrs. Carlton Foster, treasurer; Mrs. Hugo Eckhart, auditor; and Mrs. Norbert Vette, Mrs. O. R. Jones, Mrs. D. E. McCray, Mrs. Lawrence Perkins, Mrs. Lester Barton and Mrs. Henry Klein-schmitt, board members.

Push Button Saves Time, Space for AAL

Computer System to be Viewed by Public; New Equipment Does Not Decrease Staff

BY JOE WOJTYSIAK

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

One of the most advanced electronic data processing systems—that in the Aid Association for Lutherans building—will be open to the public today. Tours get underway at 2 p.m. and continue until 8.

According to Wilmer Stach, assistant vice president and director of planning of the society, the switch-over to the semi-automatic system has had a number of highly beneficial effects. "Up- permost," said Stach, "is the fact that no employees lost their jobs as a result of our switch to the automated system."

"On the contrary," Stach went on, "a large portion of our staff found themselves upgraded to new and more challenging positions because of the new equipment."

Stach asserted that AAL didn't have to increase its staff to meet its increased commitment brought about by a greater-than-expected rate of growth. He said the society was able to train necessary personnel from its staff.

No Figures

No figures are yet available on the cost-saving feature of the system. Thus no comparisons are able to be drawn between the old and new methods of office procedure.

The reason is that all figures had to be checked and double-checked to be sure no errors were made by the automated system. "There just hasn't been time to carry on a cost analysis at this time," Stach commented. "The system only began functioning in March."

Members of the society's electronic committee emphasized two other major effects of the computer system—space and security of records.

Reduction of the society's file size alone is expected to add some 3,000 square feet of floor space. The committee said the addition of the extra space will allow AAL to stay in its present quarters longer than had been anticipated in a survey conducted in 1958.

"Because of our outstripping of those estimates," the committee men said, "AAL will have to consider additional automation in order to stay in present quarters." The members said the society will be able to handle up to one million insurance certificates under the new system with the present staff. Currently, the society has 840,000 certificates in force.

Stach said the new system guards against the possibility of a disaster wiping the society out. "With all records kept in the home office as used to be the case," he said, "this danger was very real."

"Now," he said, "we are able to place a taped record of all transactions in a mine in Kansas at the end of each month. Here, once again we save needed space."

The executive also mentioned that the system facilitates decision-making of management.

Premiums

Another agency where the data system was felt is the premium accounts department which mails well over 1½ million premium due notices each year. These notices with remittances are returned at the rate of 5,000 to 25,000 a day. Prior to AAL's conversion to the electronic computer, each of these 1½-million payments had to be recorded manually on one or more of 815,000 cards. These cards occupied approximately 1,500-square-feet of floor space which can now be utilized for other clerical purposes.

At the time the payment is recorded on the master tape, the individual record already on tape is ended so the next premium notice will be prepared about three weeks prior to the due date.

All of the information on the cards mentioned above is now stored on 10½-miles of tape. . . one record occupies one inch of tape.

Neenah Police Car in Accident

NEENAH —A Neenah police car was involved in a minor accident at 6:05 a.m. Saturday in the 500 block of Winneconne Avenue.

The squad car, driven by Officer James Brisco, 774 S. Commercial St., Neenah, struck the right rear fender and bumper of a vehicle driven by Harry E. Borchardt, Jr., 28, Fremont when Borchardt made a left turn in front of the police car.

Police said Officer Brisco applied his brakes but couldn't stop in time to avoid the accident. The policeman complained of injuries to his neck and right shoulder.

In another Neenah mishap, a car driven by Paul N. Gidlof, 38, 806 Edwards St., Neenah, collided with a vehicle driven by Ellen M. Conlon, 23, route 2, Appleton, at 7:27 a.m. Friday.

Police said Gidlof was making a left turn onto Wisconsin Avenue from Commercial Street when his engine stalled, causing him to hit the Conlon car.

A. A. Trever Hall New College Dorm

Men's Residence Building Named After Former History Professor

More than a quarter-century ago, Dr. Albert Augustus Trever, professor of ancient and European history at Lawrence College, wrote in the introduction to one of his books:

"The past is not something that graduated from Lawrence in 1896. Trever himself, 23 years after his death: the Lawrence College board of trustees has voted to name the dormitory now nearing completion on the corner of South Street and Brokaw Place the A. A. Trever Residence Hall for Men.

This is the first building at Lawrence to bear the name of a faculty member, although three rooms honor great faculty members of the past — the Hiram A. Jones Latin Library in Main Hall; the Carl J. Waterman Library and William A. Harper Recital Hall, both in the Music-Drama Center.

President Douglas M. Knight commented: "I am particularly gratified that the trustee committee chose to name our newest dormitory for such a distinguished member of the Lawrence faculty. Professor Trever was equally distinguished as a teacher and a scholar. He represents that fusion of great learning and constant interest in other human beings which must always be the center of the college's success. In honoring him it seems to me that we are honoring the achievement of the whole faculty."

Taught For 35 Years

Dr. Trever died six weeks short of his planned retirement on the commencement of 1940, after 35 years of teaching at Lawrence.

He was born in Chilton in 1874, Ph.D. from the University of Chicago. A Jacob Sleeper fellowship enabled him to study at the German universities of Halle and Berlin.

Before returning to Lawrence in 1905, he taught at DePauw and for two years held pastorates in the Wisconsin Methodist conference.

Wrote Histories

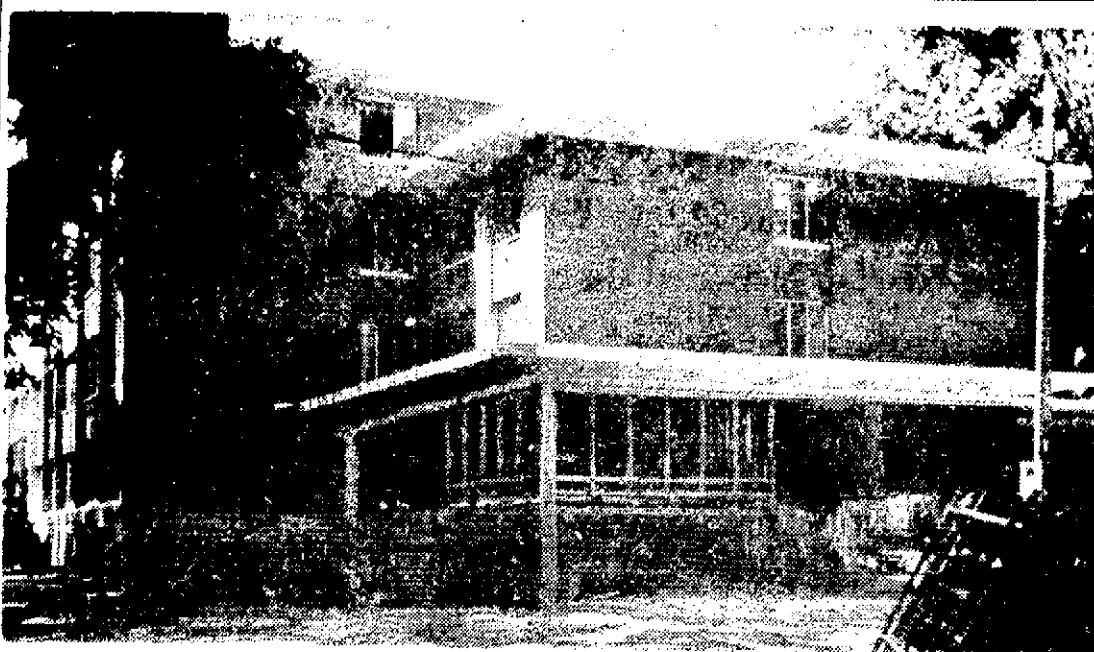

He was the author of "The History of Greek Economic Thought," in 1916, and a two-volume "The History of Ancient Civilization," appearing in 1936 and 1939 respectively. The latter was considered particularly definitive works, and drew high praise from historians, among them the eminent Preserved Smith.

In the year Dr. Trever died, the college yearbook was dedicated to him, and he was cited for many years of service as advisor to Phi Delta Theta fraternity. He was listed in "Who's Who in America" for twenty years.

Family Lawrentians

Mrs. Trever, the former Elizabeth French, was a Lawrentian with the class of 1902, and their three children all attended Lawrence: Karl, '23, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Robert Hughes, '29, Santa Ana, Calif.; and Ruth, '34, Highland Park, Ill.

Karl Trever received an Alumni Distinguished Service Award in 1962, for his work as special assistant to the archivist of the United States, and in charge of the Hoover, Roosevelt, Truman and Eisenhower presidential li-

The building, which was built at a cost of $835,000 and will house 176 men, was named in memory of Dr. Albert A. Trever, professor of ancient and European history for 35 years. He died in 1940. Chilton Family Lives Life of Travel

The Greens Have Had Homes in Afghanistan, South Africa, Iran

BY DON KAMPER

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

CHILTON—The Marvin Greens are a globe-trotting family.

They have made Chilton a brief stop-over to visit friends and family before embarking on another 10,000 mile junket that will take them back to Afghanistan. The return journey will complete a trip around the world for the already well-traveled family. They left Afghanistan several months ago on a return trip that took them through Pakistan with stops at Bangkok, Hong Kong, Tokyo and Hawaii before their arrival at Los Angeles.

When they return, in August, it will be by way of New York and Europe. Travel is no novelty for the family. With Green a State Department employee working with the Agency for International Development (AID), the family has spent four years in South Africa and in Iran two years before the last two-year stint in Afghanistan. Now it's back to the neutral Middle-East country with the ominous neighbor to the north, Russia.

Before joining the State Department agency, Green, a Dallas native, completed a 20-year hitch with the Air Force. The military service in which Green was often assigned for "special duty" quite naturally involved plenty of travel, primarily on the European continent.

Pleasant Place
The Greens find Afghanistan to be a pleasant place to live and work. It borders Russia on the south and is separated from the Arabian Sea by Pakistan.

"The climate is beautiful and the people are extremely friendly," Green said. He is eager to return to his work there.

Green is assigned to an administrative wing of the AID in support of the American technicians abroad. They live in Kandahar, one of the country's principal cities.

Kandahar is a city of about 100,000 persons, Green estimated, in view of the non-existent Afghan census. The city is located in the fertile Helmand River valley. It is surrounded by mountains and the setting is much like the countryside in Arizona, Green said.

AID Program

Because of the nature of the program, Green was unable to discuss it in any detail without first getting State Department clearance. In general, however, he said the AID, which evolved from the Marshall Plan, ICA and Point 4 type programs, is helping Afghans to build highways, airports, establish an airline irrigation, land reclamation and other projects to spur progress. The United States is vying with Russia for Afghan good will. Green said the Russians have an aid program similar to our's in Afghanistan.

Much of the AID program's emphasis is centered on transportation but the camel and donkey are still the chief mode of transportation for the Arabic people who inhabit the country.

They are primarily Moslems and accordingly, the women are still veiled, Green said. Kandahar, described as a very old city, abounds with the "baggy pants and turbans" traditional to the Arabic people.

Souvenir Care

Their travels have enabled the Greens to assemble an enviable souvenir collection. During their four years in Africa, they traveled throughout the southern portion of the continent and acquired a collection of native artifacts including masks, drums, spears, shields and the like.

Brassware collecting is a particular hobby for the couple and they are especially proud of a large tray they found in Asia. It features engravings of all the Persian kings and poets. "A real collector's item," Green commented.

Afghanistan is famous for its rug weaving and Karakul, a type of Persian lamb used for stoles and hats. These haven't been added to the collection, but then they

The Globe Has Come to be "home" for the Marvin Green family. Even little Bonnie Lynn, 2, will have circled it when she returns with her parents to Afghanistan next month. The Greens' other daughter is Debbie, 8. The family is visiting the Chilton home of Mrs. Green's parents, Dr. and Mrs. Royal Kiofanda. (Post-Crescent Photo) will have two more years in the country.

Real Education

For Debbie, their 8-year-old daughter, the globe-trotting provided an enriching early education. She was born in the U. S. but reached school age in South Africa. She attended a Hebrew nursery school, then an English Catholic parochial school and finally wound up in an English public school. "She observed all the Hebrew and Catholic feasts but with a heavy English accent," her father related in his soft Texas drawl.

The world is indeed a small place, the couple learned in their travels. A chance meeting with Mrs. Green's childhood friend, the former June Schaub, Chilton, in the lobby of a Pakistan hotel proved the point. They agreed the odds were long against two girls from a 2,500-population Wisconsin town running into each other by coincidence in Pakistan.

The family seems to thrive on travel but they will concede that there is some inconvenience. They agree, however, that the inconvenience is more than offset by their firm convictions in the good the AID program is doing for the U. S. and the underdeveloped areas it reaches.

African Nations Plan UN Showdown This Fall

Reprisals Against Apartheid, Angola Set Stage for Pressure Debates

BY MILTON BESSER

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—African pressures on Portugal and South Africa are mounting at the United Nations, with possible far-reaching consequences for the world organization.

In prospect are meetings of the U.N. Security Council, at which representatives of the 32-nation African group will make new demands for punitive action against Portugal for alleged acts of repression in its African territories. They will seek similar action against South Africa for its refusal to abandon white supremacy policies.

Debate along these lines is not new. But some heads of Western delegations are apprehensive about these two possibilities in the wake of the council meetings tentatively set for the end of this month.

—Portugal and South Africa may quit the United Nations.

—The African nations may send "freedom fighters" into places like Angola and South West Africa and set the stage for outbreaks of even greater violence than encountered to date.

In the past, Portugal and South Africa have raised, themselves, the question of whether they should stay in the United Nations and remain targets for increasing attack.

Earlier Threats

Portugal boycotted the General Assembly in January last year when the assembly called on that nation to end alleged repression in Angola. The vote was 99 to 2, with only Spain and South Africa voting No.

South Africa has taken similar action when the assembly or its committees debated apartheid, the country's racial separation policy. At one time, South Africa drastically reduced its U.N. representation as a gesture of protest against what it called interference in its domestic affairs.

The decision to bring new pressure was reached by the African nations at the recent heads of state conference in Addis Ababa.

Discover Friends

Alex Quaison-Sackey, Ghana's ambassador to the United Nations, said at a news conference at U.N. headquarters one purpose is to discover "who are our friends" among the big powers on the Security Council.

This puts the United States, Britain and France, as Atlantic allies of Portugal, in a difficult position—to the obvious pleasure of the Soviet Union.

Recently 37 African nations walked out of the International Labor Organization Conference in Geneva to underscore demands that South Africa be expelled from the U.N. agency because of her racial segregation policies. This raised the prospect of similar action by the Africans at the U.N. Assembly opening in mid-September, if they do not achieve satisfaction before the Security Council.

Opposed Penalties

Last December the three Western powers voted against a resolution in the General Assembly that requested the Security Council to impose penalties on Portugal unless it took immediate steps to place Angola on the road to independence.

With Soviet bloc and Asian-African support the resolution was approved 57 to 14, with 18 abstentions. It put on record a statement that Portugal's noncompliance with previous resolutions is inconsistent with U.N. membership.

The Western powers took a similar stand on a resolution recommending that member nations impose severe trade and diplomatic boycotts against South Africa in an effort to force abandonment of its white supremacy policies. If such measures fail, the resolution said, the council should consider ordering South Africa expelled from the United Nations.

African Aim

The Africans will try at the many coming council sessions to seek the 4-H Key Award and is a resolution of the assembly this year of being one of four resolutions. Thus far the appeal to African members to attend the member nations to boycott South Africa economically has been largely ignored.

Emphasizing the importance they attach to the council sessions, at least four African foreign ministers will be present to address the council, from Liberia, the Malagasy republic, Sierra Leone and Tunisia.

Waupaca Recalls Norris

Chain O'Lakes Site Of Reunions for Valparaiso Men

BY FRANCES V. HUTCHINSON

WAUPACA—Each summer the resort community of Waupaca is bustling with the arrival of thousands of summer visitors. Most respected and remembered by the local citizenry is the late George W. Norris, U.S. Senator from Nebraska.

That stocky, silver-haired figure, usually puffing at a cigar, was a familiar one on Waupaca's Main Street but few could claim more than a passing acquaintance with him. That, despite his more than 30 years as a summer resident.

On only one occasion did the Senator ever participate in civic affairs and that was in 1939 when a new post office was dedicated. He spoke feelingly that day of the growth of monster corporations and the wave of technological processes which made for industrial unemployment which was harrasing the country in 1939.

Secret Organization

There was one side of Sen. Norris not generally known to the public. That was his loyalty to the L.U.N., the mysterious secret organization formed in 1893 when nine young men from the University of Valparaiso pledged upon graduation to meet annually as long as they lived to review their experiences.

On one occasion it was necessary for the Senator to travel from the Pacific coast to Delavan, Wis. to attend the L.U.N. and frequently the trip was made from Washington, D.C., to the lakes where he spent only time enough to keep his pledge to "meet in annual reunion". In 1933 when there were only three of the group left, the reunion was held at the home of H. H. Harrington in Waukesha, Wis., who because of illness would otherwise have been unable to attend. He died in 1937.

In 1940, although the Senator was worn by nearly 12 months of legislative work, he was determined to make no exception to keep the pledge. Accompanied by his son-in-law, John Robertson, who did the driving, Sen. Norris 24, Woonapark, Armatree, N.W. He left the capitol on Thursday and was back the following Wednesday spending three weeks at the Osage day noon when the Senate reconvened. The distance of 1,191 miles farmer, who is willing to lend equipment for grain, he said, is similar to that used in the United States as an International Farm than is used in this area.

For 58 years Sen. Norris made that sentimental journey, often re-telling that it took all the money he made that first year after his two and one-half months, mostly in California, where he visited a sheep ranch and a 160-acre dairy farm before moving to a 660-acre irrigated farm. Evans reported living conditions are about the same in both countries, although American food is prepared differently than it is at home.

He is active in the Junior Farmer organization, which is similar to the 4-H program. He served as secretary before serving to independence.

Good Guest

Mrs. Severson said Evans is a good house guest, keeping his room and belongings in good shape and his host reported Evans also is a good man in the field.

African Aim

The Africans will try at the many coming council sessions to seek the 4-H Key Award and is a resolution of the assembly this year of being one of four resolutions. Thus far the appeal to African members to attend the member nations to boycott South Africa economically has been largely ignored.

"The HELPINGEST Bank in Town"

Many hours of hard work were involved in changing the scene below to the one at right, the finished exterior of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Washburn, 2120 S. Gladys Ave. The picture below was taken late in the winter of '61, as snow fell. The couple worked throughout that mild winter, often arriving to sweep off an inch of snow from the floor and starting to work where they'd left off the day before. Except for wiring, plumbing and plastering, the couple built their home completely on their own.

The House the Washburns Built

Board by Board, Brick by Brick, Appleton Couple Builds Own Home

BY JEAN OTTO
Post-Crescent Women's Editor

"It's not so unusual," smiles the diminutive, brown-haired Joyce Washburn. "We're convinced that anyone who can read and has access to a library could do the same." Her husband, Cliff, pipe in hand, nods quiet agreement.

The couple, looking back on two years of learning by doing, know whereof they speak. The library provided the instruction. They provided the labor. Except for wiring, plumbing and plastering, the couple, brick by brick, board by board, nail by nail, built their own home. Now they can sit back in a most comfortable and attractive living room, enjoy a snack in their cheerful kitchen, entertain guests in their lovely dining room, or party in the recreation room, and make the statement that anyone could do it.

The house at 2120 S. Gladys Ave. is more than four handsome walls. To Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Washburn, who poured much of themselves into its building, it serves a dual purpose. Mrs. Washburn suffers from bronchial asthma, aggravated by allergies. The couple came to Appleton in 1952, after their graduation from Wisconsin State College, Eau Claire. Mr. Washburn teaches physical education at Madison Junior High School and Mrs. Washburn kindergarten at Huntley School. The pair moved into a five room bungalow, and Mrs. Washburn began a long series of trips to Madison for allergy desensitization. The process took seven years, and disclosed that she is sensitive to 16 separate substances, with house dust and molds causing major problems. Doctors advised an air conditioned home as dust-free as possible. They also indicated that all synthetics be used in the furnishings and that Mrs. Washburn should stay away from a basement area or any place that might be cool and damp.

From their special need grew the Washburns' determination to build their own home, as they needed and wanted it. Cliff, or 'Coach', had long had the desire to try his hand at building—yet his only previous experience was working summers as a laborer for a mason while going to college. He took several courses at the Vocational School to learn the use of tools—and the project was underway.

The couple pored over house plans — searched libraries — read newspapers — then chose a split level design best suited to their needs. The actual basement area was small — sufficient for a workshop and heating unit and no more. Tools were 'most wanted' Christmas gifts for years. A particular saw or carpenter's tool took the place of perfume or socks for both husband and wife.

The lot on Gladys Avenue was purchased in 1956, the year both attended summer school at Wisconsin State College, Oshkosh. That summer was the worst Joyce had experienced as far as her health was concerned, and the plan to build was relegated to the immediate future with the lot purchase. It was, however, four more years before the actual work began. The study of a 'big blue book' on house construction occupied many long winter evenings and the accumulation of tools continued at a steady clip.

In April, 1960, the basement was dug and three big trees cut down. The Washburns originally intended to put their home toward the back of the lot—but in the years after buying, other builders had placed their homes closer to the street. So as not to have their own house look lost in the back, they changed plans, and had to cut three large trees in the process.

Spent Evenings, Weekends at Site

Spring was a season of rains that year, and it took six weeks for Mr. Washburn to finish putting in footings. As they were both teaching in the daytime, the couple could work only in the evening, and often they labored until after dusk, with Mrs. Washburn holding a match close to the numbers on a surveyor's transit so the foundation would be level. Work was held up further that summer as both again attended summer school.

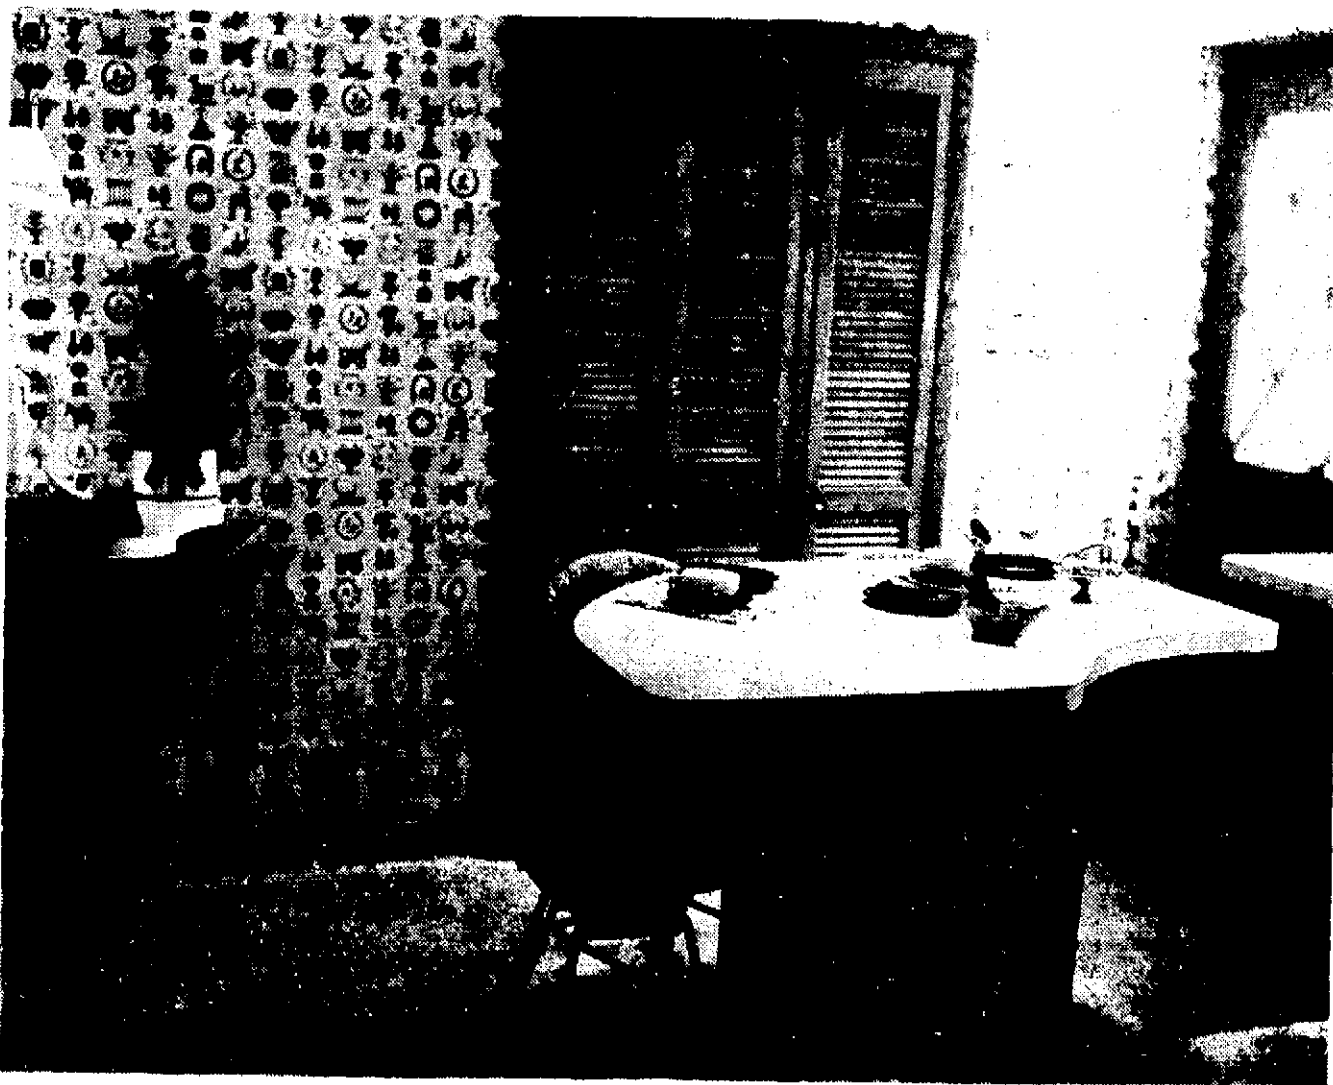

It was decided at the outset to keep track of hours worked — at both skilled and unskilled labor. Cliff and Joyce soon found they were too tired at night to care about 'book work'. By the time summer school ended, the foundation — 12 blocks high under the living room area and seven blocks high on the recreation room and basement side, was finished. When the time the first snow fell in November, the living room side was framed and roofed.

Swept Away Snow and Went to Work

Winter was a series of mild days, and the couple took advantage of them. During late fall they framed the full two story half of the home, applying plywood over the first floor ceiling area during Christmas vacation. It was common for them to arrive at

In the spring of 1960 Clifford Washburn spent a good deal of time in the trenches. That particular season was a rainy one, and it took six weeks to put in the footings. A triple waterproofing was given the foundation. All of the work was done on weekends, as Mr. Washburn and his wife are teachers. The first summer they worked on their home, the couple attended summer school for eight weeks. The 'builders' encountered several problems in their task—one was reversing the plan. Everything had to be read 'backwards' and Mrs. Washburn had charge of interpreting the architect's work.

The kitchen of the Washburn home features a movable island in the center. To the right are the sink and cupboards, stove and refrigerator. The doors in the background hide shallow cupboards, used for storing canned goods and other small items. The telephone desk at left was made from the cutout of the sink. Future plans include a small drawer underneath the countertop. At left is the living room, showing the Tennessee stone fireplace with its low Minnesota stone hearth. The wall features a planter as it winds around to the foyer on the ground level.

A life that began in Liberia, a chief, the young woman laughs, that she didn't know much about Africa or Liberia when she was asked to speak about it. "I surely studied about Africa before going out to lecture," she says.

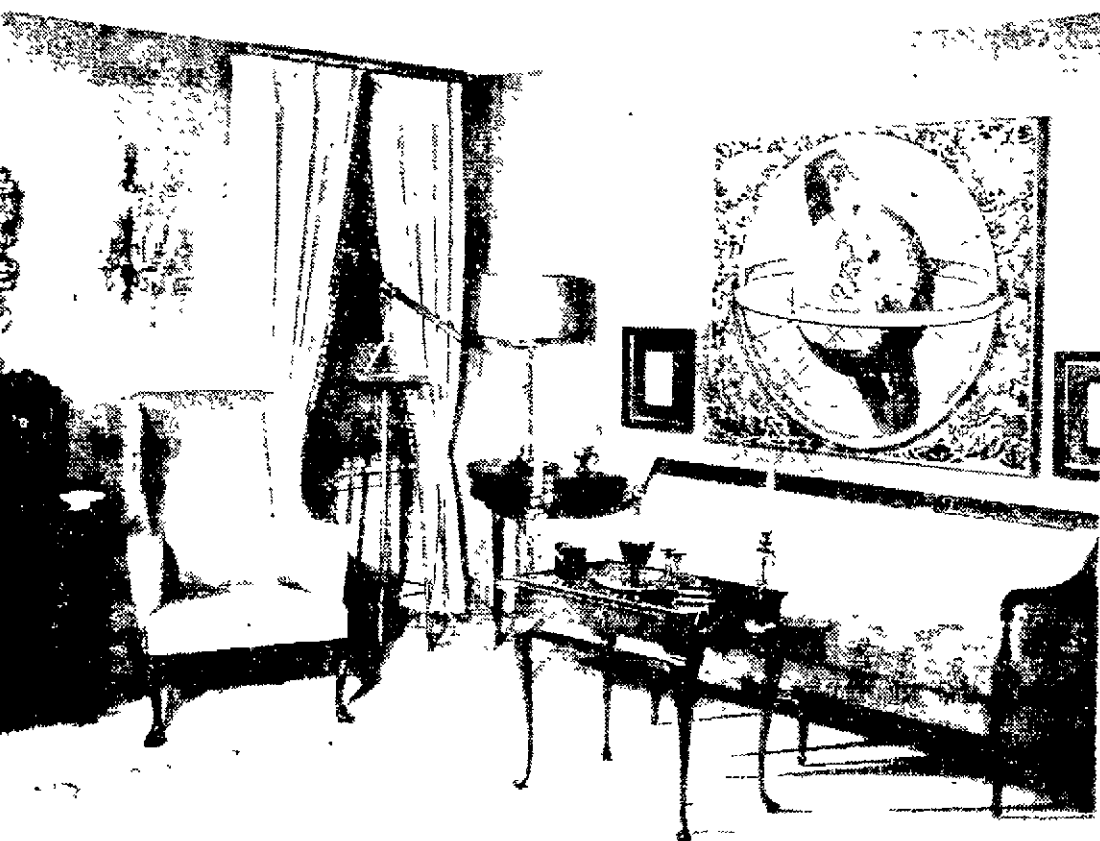

After graduation the young woman taught English and served as dean of women at Wiley College, Marshall, Texas, until 1919. Until 1924 she was Girl Reserve secretary at the YWCA, Indianapolis Colored Branch. She married her physician husband in 1924 and the couple built the nine-room house they have lived in for 28 years.

Mrs. Smith served on the Waukegan High School board for 12 years, yet she most loved her work with the YWCA. "The hardest thing I ever had to do was give up the school board and the YWCA," she said. She also has worked with Family Service, Community Chest, Happy Day Nursery and AAUW.

Perseverance, Pluck, Work All Part of Building Home

the site, sweep off an inch or so of new fallen snow, and go to work. By Easter, the house was ready for the roof rafters.

In the summer of '61, the roof was shingled and professional help called to rough in the heating, plumbing and wiring. It was also the time to rough in the fireplace, the new hand-some focal point in the living room. The inside was roughed with common brick, and the fireplace slab poured. When mason Washburn reached the roof line, they made the upper chimney of the same white brick that covers most of the outside of the home.

Talking progress from season to season has a way of eliminating all the hours and days of work that go into building a home. It cuts out all the fitting of boards, all the nailing, all the triple water-proofing of foundation, all the blisters and aching backs and splinters. It also eliminates all the standing back and admiring, all the planning, all the encouragement from future neighbors, all the 'few minutes out' and then back to work.

With heavy work going ahead, Mrs. Washburn's tasks increased. She used the living room floor as a working area to stain the rough cedar used on the front exterior of the home. She also began her 'brick work', dipping each of the cement bricks in waterproof white cement. She mixed the covering in a dishpan, encountering a real problem in making a smooth mixture of 'waterproof' cement and water. It took about an hour to stir enough to cover 135 bricks.

Although plans called for brick only on the front of the house, the couple decided to use it all around. They figure between 15 and 20,000 bricks were used—remembering that they kept track for a while and then gave up counting. Anytime she wasn't doing one of her other chores, Mrs. Washburn would 'mix a batch' of bricks. By the time they approached the end of that work last summer, Cliff could out them in place faster than she could dip and they finished the coating job together.

Striving on a cake must now seem like child's play to the fragile-looking homemaker, who also admits having mixed all the mortar by hand.

By the fall of '61 the bricks had been laid as high as the living room windows in the front, the planters were up and all the windows were in. As their friends waved 'goodbye' as they went to 'Packer' football games, the Washburns worked with a transistor radio in the background. That fall, the rock lath and insulation were installed.

Handsome Tennessee stone was applied that winter to the fireplace wall. The stone begins on the right hand wall of the entry, winds around the stairway and into the living room, where it covers the entire wall. The stone had been dumped in the driveway, and Mrs. Washburn sorted each piece according to thickness, assembling it in little piles all over the yard. The stones in the wall all have straight joints, each shaped by Cliff. When a certain color and thickness was needed for a special place, Joyce went to the proper rock pile. When the pieces were all in place, Mr. Washburn rockfaced every stone with a chisel, to give it the rough-textured appearance they wanted. The low hearth is of Minnesota stone. As the wall turns from the foyer to the living room, a built-in planter breaks the high expanse of wall. The foyer floor is marble, retrieved from shower stalls in an old building torn down in Eau Claire 20 or 30 years ago.

It was cut in various sized rectangles. The foyer opens at the same level into the recreation room and the garage. Six steps lead to the living room.

A seemingly endless task was the application of rock lath in the preparation for plastering. The couple, helped on one or two occasions by friends who dropped in with hammers and willing arms applied every bit of lath. "You've no idea how many little corners there are in a house," Mrs. Washburn says with conviction. Every closet, every little out of the way place, is put to use in the house and each one is plastered and finished. Mrs. Washburn cut the lath with a razor blade and cardboard scorer. Mr. Washburn nailed.

With plastering completed the couple began to tile the bathrooms, bringing up the colored stone from the floors to the walls. The endless brick work outside continued and in June, 1962 the driveway, stoop and walk were poured. Just before the couple moved into the house, the carpenter was laid.

While the Washburns admit it's easier—and more convenient—to be doing the living work on a home when you live in it, they agree that the hectic pace

Curtain Stretcher

Dear Heloise:
For those who use curtain stretchers and prick their fingers many times while stretching the starched curtains . . . I have found that I can hold the curtain in my right hand and use a plain fork (a salad fork is great) and "mash" the curtain over the sharp nails without pricking my finger in the least!

The times of the fork "Mash" the curtain down onto the wooden stretcher neatly, immediately, and it's an excellent substitute for my poor fingers.

Some women might find it better to start on the left side of the curtain stretcher, holding the fork in the right hand.

And do women know that if they put the four corners of the curtains on the stretcher first and then go back and put the curtain on the nails between them, it will end up a perfectly-stretched curtain? It's always square this way.

A Golf Motif sets the theme for a summer party. Cover the buffet table with a green cloth and use napkins of a contrasting shade of green. Place a miniature golf course at the back and center of the table and surround it with attractively displayed food dishes—each identified with a "flag" inserted to show its "hole number." Invitations may be made from actual golf score cards from your local country club or golf course. Cover the front of each score card with a piece of green construction paper. Cut out pictures close to actual size of golf balls and paste on front. Beneath it, attach a real golf tee with cellophane tape. Across the bottom, letter "FORE."

Golf Theme Ideal for Summer Party Time

For the golf-minded family, listing the menu, which they will use to find their way around the table-top "course".

Here's the suggested "par-tee" menu:

- First Hole: Melon BALLS
- Second Hole: Baked Ham SLICES
- Third Hole: GREEN beans
- Fourth Hole: PUTTER Peas
- Fifth Hole: MASHIE Potatoes
- Sixth Hole: ROUGHAGE (Tossed Salad)

Whether it's "dinner for eight" with the members of your husband's foursome and their wives as guests, or a party for a crowd, you can use the same theme.

Nine Course Dinner

The party menu consists of nine courses—and each dish is identified with a miniature numbered golf flag (made of paper) attached to a plastic horseshoe pick inserted in the ham platter with a miniature num-fresh mint. Sneak Preview--Bathing Beauties of 1980

Warm weather and swimming pools have become summertime friends, and no matter what the age, the lure of water brings promises of refreshment and fun. Even the wading pool set has its day, when a romp across the shallow water is more exciting than an ice cream cone.

A youngster needn't be old enough to walk to enjoy the pleasures of a cool splash. There's always that first breath taking sit-down, when the water causes a shiver and a gasp and then that delightful wet, shivery 'I'm swimming' feeling.

Fashions for the wading pool offer considerably more freedom than is dictated on the other side of the fence. Bathing beauties and their beaux, 1980 variety, have not yet tumbled to the necessities of following a fashion line.

Shown here are a few of the styles worn with aplomb at Mead Park Pool on a warm summer afternoon. The children unconcerned about their appearance, had the time of their lives, climbing in and out of the water, and shrieking their delight to whomever would listen.

Kathy Best, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. John Best, Chicago, was visiting her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Brinkman, 1405 Kenilworth Ave., when she paid a call at the Appleton swimming pool. The little girl's splash attire was navy blue and white with belt worn at the hipline. Sara Hemmen, right, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Hammen, 1108 E. Wisconsin Ave., wore a striped cotton suit for her dunk in the cooling water.

Jeanine Ann Paulson sat on the edge of the wading pool and soaked up sunshine. Her white knit suit has a plaid skirt, also with a hipline treatment. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Paulson, 517 N. Division St. At right, Laurie Offenbecher, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Offenbecher, 319½ N. Division St., isn't old enough to walk, yet she loves the water and feels right at home with bigger and braver splashers. Her suit is a nylon knit in blue with red trim.

Mary Derfus' Plaid swim suit tied at the shoulders and offered all the comfort needed by a little girl who knows how to romp and shout when she has the chance. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Derfus, 218 N. Meade St. She and her sister, Susan, behind her, frolicked in the water, splashing each other and dashing across the pool.

Mary Lee Rooyakker decided the most fun at the Mead Park Pool was going in and out of the water. The youngster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Rooyakker, route 4, Appleton, was as fashionable as a teen-ager in a tank suit. At left, Dobie Green, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Green, 1125 Nevada Court, was too young for a suit, so he wore the next best thing. (Post-Crescent Photos)

Randy Wilke's swimming attire included a plastic duck which never left his middle. The young man, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roger Wilke, 204 S. Weimer St., was thoroughly wet from the splashing of other youngsters. He roamed all around the pool, smiling at everyone, completely absorbed in his own business.

Pair Weds In Double Ring Rite

Nuptial promises were exchanged at 3 p.m. Saturday by Miss Audrey Ann Kindschy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer R. Kindschy, 1017 E. Lindbergh St., and Wesley A. Wichman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Wichman, 1024 E. Lindbergh St.

The Rev. Frank Dauner performed the double ring ceremony at Evangelical United Brethren Church.

The couple's honor attendants were Miss Joyce Dettmann and Kenneth Wichman, a brother of the bridegroom. Ushering duties were fulfilled by Wayne Kindschy, a nephew of the bride and Thomas Stoerle.

A 5 p.m. reception was held in the church parlor. The couple was graduated from Appleton High School. The bride is employed at Wisconsin Telephone Co. and the bridegroom is with Great Northern Container Corp.

The couple will reside at 817 E. Franklin St.

Most 'Suitable' Fall Fashions

Monte-Sano's blue and brown tweed jacket and slim skirt place the high neckline at the top of fall fashion. The jacket is full cut and the neckline stands high and wide. Above, right, the sportive look is interpreted by Paul Parnes in a grayish tweed suit with a long loose jacket and its own fringed scarf. Below, the highland mists of Scotland might be beautifully trod in this plaid wool outfit by designer Bill Blass for Maurice Rentner. The green and red combination is designed into pleated skirt, jacket and stole.

The more than 200 reporters attending the New York Couture Group's semi-annual press week preview of fall fashions last week learned one important fact—it's essential to be young. The youthful sportive look was interpreted for all kinds of women, the sassy, the sexy and the sporty. They clung to only one premise—that no matter how old the woman, she should look her youngish best.

Taking the young and sportive tack was David Kidd, a designing young Scotsman for Arthur Jablow. Kills would have been too Scottish even for this Kidd, but his models did tromp into the spotlight in swingy, houndstooth check skirts, suede vests, leather caps, heavy cable stitch stockings and knee high boots.

This was the much touted country cousin look, come to the city slicker.

Feminine and sophisticated is designer Jo Copeland's fashion argument for womanhood. Her languid models spelled this out in blousy, long torsoed costumes which hugged the hipline briefly and then flared outward thanks to deep pleats and concealed folds.

Reporters Take the 'Pledge'

However, designers Ann Klein and Chuck Howard had many reporters wishing they were flat-chested and under 30 again at the sight of the snappy collection for the Junior Sophisticates dress house.

At least a half dozen women in the audience vocally took diet pledges after viewing the lithsome skimmer jumpers, worn over gigantic turtle neck dickeys; or the willowy shifts which formed the basis for jacket costumes and coat or cape combinations.

Two-for-the-price-of-one was the sales pitch for voluminous double-faced magician's capes which turned from leather to leopard. One broad-tail cape version unzipped at the shoulder to zip up again over the hip, becoming a broadtail skirt.

Another changeling idea was a houndstooth check skirt that wrapped and snapped low on the hip bone over what appeared to be a long sleeved black crepe top. Without the skirt, the topper stood alone as a figure-skimming middy dress.

A model for Davidow wrapped a slim brown cape over a white wool, easy-fitting two-piece suit. The costume was part of the winter collections previewed by fashion writers from throughout the country. At left is a costume with a suit look. The classic style was presented by the house of Hattie Carnegie. It features a tan and white glen plaid wool jacket over a sleeveless sheath. (AP Wirephotos)

A man's shirt, refined, belted, and combined with a white skirt, served as the model for this two-piece outfit by Teal Traina's winter collection, shown in New York this week as part of the New York Couture Group's semi-annual press showing.

Your Problems Aisle Seats Considered Best By Notorious Rubbernecker church every Sunday since we lars! married. In addition to the spiritual uplift I'm frank to admit I thoroughly enjoy watching my fellow worshippers as they enter the church—especially the women. It's the finest style show anybody ever saw.

The aisle seats are best for viewing so I always insist that Harold get me to the church early to make sure I get one. And this is where my problem begins.

The latecomers invariably arrive breathless and apologetic. They smile pleasantly and say, "Would you mind moving down three?"

Well, I darned well do mind moving down three because I then lose my aisle position. So, I return the smile and reply, "That's all right, you may pass on through."

My husband claims this is rude of me and he wants to drop through the floor whenever I say it. What do you think? — Anchored Adeline

Dear Anchored: Your extraordinary interest in who's wearing what in a place of worship is shameful—but that's another letter. Since you get to church early for the avowed purpose of selecting a choice seat (to watch the fashion parade) you need feel no guilt about refusing to surrender your seat to a late-arriver.

And please tell your husband to forget about "dropping through the floor." His thoughts in church (and yours, too) should be concentrated on going upward—not downward.

Art at Auction Makes for Quiet, But Exciting Show of Big Money

High Drama Enacted as Collection of Impressionistic Works Breaks Record

BY EDDY GILMORE

LONDON (AP) — A modern art auction is a swift-moving, exciting show.

At London's old firm, Sotheby's, it's 72-odd minutes of high drama and hope — hope both realized and shattered—and staggering prices.

Center of the stage is a long, high-ceilinged room that seats 70 persons.

At the far end a small auctioneer's desk, towers above all else at a height of eight feet.

Admission is by invitation, the dress is evening gowns and dinner jackets and the starting time is 9:30 p. m.

Besides the auctioneer's chair is a single easel and off against one wall, 47 paintings stacked with their backs to the audience — for that's what it is — people to come to look and gasp as well as bid.

Peter Wilson, tall, soft-spoken and urbane, an old Etonian and chairman of Sotheby's, is the auctioneer.

At 9:23 he enters the room and with a smile nods to several people in the audience.

So many persons want to attend that other rooms have been cleared and closed-circuit television sets installed to help them with their bidding.

In each off-stage room sits a Sotheby's representative, a telephone at his elbow.

The telephones are connected to the main room and at a pair of elevated benches before a battery of telephones sit more representatives.

They relay bids that come in from the side rooms to the auctioneer.

At 9:27 Wilson climbs to his seat, unfolds a catalogue of the paintings he will sell.

With a slight smile, he picks up his gavel, nods to two attendants down on the floor to his left.

The attendants move to the wall, pick up the first painting and place it on the easel.

"Now," says Wilson, "shall we start this one at 500 pounds?" ($1,400).

"500," says someone halfway back in the long rows of seats.

"500," repeats Wilson.

"600," says a man with a red carnation.

"I have 600," Wilson goes on in his measured voice.

Back in the rear of the room a man who is leaning against the wall nods his head.

The bidding goes on spiritedly until it reaches 6,800 pounds ($19,040).

One of the men at the telephones speak out saying "7,000 from the gallery room."

auctioneer's platform and the battery of telephones — a pair of tuxedoed employees keep notes of the bidding on large ledgers.

"7,000," says Wilson.

There's a pause.

"Sold at 7,000 —" says Wilson, but at that a voice from the floor, from the man with the red carnation says, "7,500."

"7,500," repeats Wilson, never once raising his voice. "7,500."

He raises his gavel, quickly searches the faces of the bidders and then breaks the silence with a crack of the gavel, announcing in the same cultured voice:

"Sold for 7,500 pounds."

Englishman to Attend Brigade

NEENAH — When the tribes of Indians left Boys' Brigade headquarters for Camp Onaway near Waupaca Saturday, an English preacher went along.

He is the Rev. T. W. Richardson, vicar of Radcliffe on Trent, Nottingham, and a veteran of the Boys' Brigade in England.

The Rev. Richardson, who has been in this country for three weeks on a sight-seeing tour, arrived in Neenah Friday evening and left for Camp Onaway Sunday.

Neenah, site of the only Boys' Brigade unit in this area, was a natural stopoff point for the Rev. Richardson on his U.S. tour.

The Rev. Richardson has been at every International Camp held since he became affiliated with more.

He plans to attend this year's international event at Trinity College, Glenalmond, Scotland, in August, at which four Brigades and two adult leaders from Neenah will be present.

Fox Cities Artists to Judge Sixth Winnebagoland Art Fair

OSHKOSH — A Lawrence College art professor and the instructor for the Bergstrom Art Center classes will judge nearly 1,000 pieces of art at the Sixth Annual Winnebagoland Art Fair today at the Oshkosh Public Museum grounds.

The show will open at 1 p. m. and close at 8 p. m. and the directors of the exhibit promise a show "rain or shine."

The judges are Michael Brandt, nationally known jewelry craftsman and Lawrence art professor; and Mrs. George Skowronski, Neenah, the Bergstrom Center art instructor.

Works by some 100 artists from about 20 communities in 17 Fox Valley counties will be on display. All media and techniques will be included.

Miss Oshkosh

Results of the judging will be announced at 4 p. m. when Jill Bylow of Neenah, Miss Oshkosh of 1963, will make the presentation of 20 awards; seven gold ribbons carrying a $25 cash value each, three red ribbons carrying merchandise prizes and 10 white honorable mention ribbons.

A work from each of the artists will be selected for the judging which will take place after the works are in place after 11 a. m. today. Winning pieces will go on display at the Oshkosh Museum for the rest of the month.

The current museum show of Wisconsin wildflower paintings by Gretha Sohn closes today.

The fair is sponsored by the Fox Valley Artists Association, the public museum and the museum auxiliary. The latter will serve refreshments during the exhibit.

Well-Known Judges

Brandt has won national and international acclaim for his jewelry and silver works. He was head of the Appleton public school art department before he joined the Lawrence faculty after serving a

Sears Art Collection Show Proves Triumph of Vincent Price's Taste

Merchandising Masters Provides Gallerygoers Variety of Views

BY JAY JOSLYN
Post-Crescent Sunday Editor

OSHKOSH — Virtuoso performances are nothing new for Vincent Price, the actor and raconteur; but he has outdone himself as an art connoisseur as evinced by the collection of art works on display currently at the Sears and Roebuck store here.

The big, department store chain commissioned the actor to select $1 million worth of paintings and graphics to be placed on sale in the chain's stores on the same financing terms as other household furnishings. In fact, the collection is being considered by the sales personnel as part of the home furnishings department.

No matter how this merchandising plan works out, the act of collecting — displaying as it does Price's range of taste—must be recognized as a major performance in the field.

Same Criterion

Although the run-of-the-mill appreciation of art is considered as being tied up in the phrase, "I don't know art, but I know what I like," the action of many judges and so-called experts indicates that that phrase explains what they do also.

However, Vincent Price in the Sears collection has stepped out of the confines of run-of-the-mill appreciator and expert alike. His collection ranges from alpha to omega, from the masters to today's interpreters, from knife stacked textures to the elusive qualities of Oriental woodblocks and watercolors of the last century.

Based on price value, a small, precise sylvan scene oil by the "old" American master Max Weber, is the star of the show at $1,000; but at the opening night showing the popularity nod went to a street scene in gouache by the University of Wisconsin artist-in-residence Aaron Bohrod. The work hearkens back to a time before Bohrod collected his subjects and pinned them to a board.

Snob Appeal

A hint of something like the snob appeal of owning artworks is insinuated into the show by the offer of the opportunity to own a Rembrandt for the relatively nominal sum of $250—on easy terms. However, the Rembrandt is an etching of a head that measures about 1. inches square. It is more of a conversation piece rather than a definitive example of the Dutch master's skill.

Price was helped in his collecting the part of the show on display here by the release to public sale of the James Bulwer collection of Norwich, England, school of watercolors in 1962. The works are gems of color and line and the collection makes up a major part of the show.

A more modern Englishman, George Wallace Jardine, provides the magic in the show with his finely crafted oils of dreamlike composition and content.

A good deal of the exhibit here is made up of graphics but the names affixed to them are giants: Braque, Chagall, Daumier, Goya, Hogarth, Leger, Millet, Roualt and Rowlandson, to mention a few.

The appearance of part of the Price collection here has turned the Sears' second floor into a gallery of some importance until next Saturday. Viewers—if not buyers—should keep the area well populated.

National Gallery Collection Goes On Display Monday

OSHKOSH — The Reeves Memorial Union at Oshkosh State College will open an exhibit of "American Prints Today" on Monday. The show will run through Aug. 1.

The exhibit, revealing the wide range of art being made by American printmakers, was developed from the Rosenwald Collection at the National Gallery of Art, Washington, D. C.

Included in the show are woodcut prints by Carol Summers, intaglio prints by Josef Albers and Ezio Martinelli, etchings by Moïse Smith and Peter Takal, lithographs by Reginald Pollack and Jasper Johns and a "pop art" collage-intaglio by Michael Ponce de Leon.

Renaissance

The art world is experiencing a renaissance in the print making Mrs. Skowronski's works are craft and the medium is attracting the attention of painters and sculptors as well as artists originally dedicated to the skill.

The current exhibit, a successful 1959-60 touring show, is by Oshkosh members of the Fox Valley Artists Association, Mrs. Smithsonian Institution and is Max Spencer, 685 Brooks Rd., sponsored here by the Reeve Union Program Committee.

Gable-Roofed Wing Refines Old Style

A Gable-Roofed Wing, containing the living room, gives this bi-level home some of the flavor of a split-level. It contains three bedrooms on the main level and a fourth bedroom and third full bath on the bonus lower level.

The Position of This living room is considered an innovation in bi-level design. It is two steps up from the foyer (at right, behind the fireplace) and three steps below the dining room, separated by a balcony rail. Through the glass doors at left is a terrace-porch combination, enclosed on three sides.

BY JULES LOH

Just when you begin to believe the architects have thought of everything, along comes a brand new innovation that further refines an already established design.

Did you ever see a bi-level home with a gable-roofed wing? That's what today's House of the Week boasts—and the improvement on the inside is just as dramatic as on the outside.

For one thing, the cramped effect of a mid-level foyer, a drawback in most bi-level homes, has been completely eliminated.

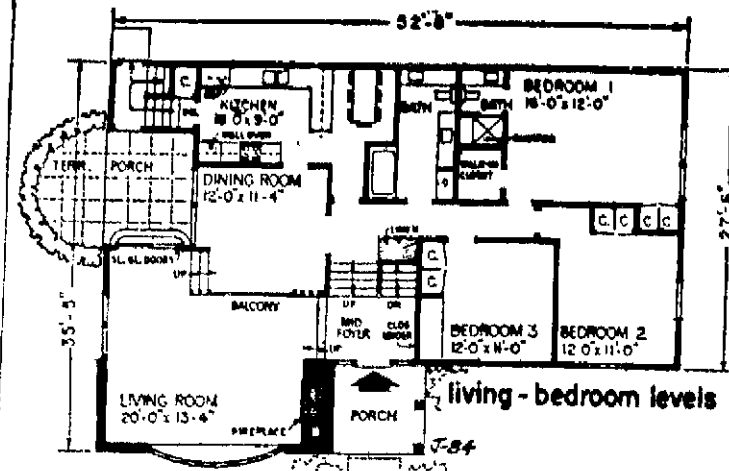

In this house the living room, located in the gabled wing, is two steps up from the foyer and immediately visible when you step inside the front door.

Usual Stair Plan

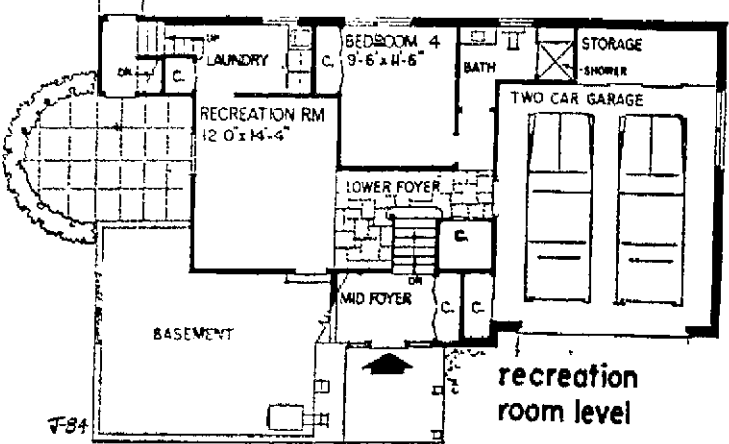

There still is the usual bi-level stair arrangement—five steps up to the main level; five steps down to the lower level—but the side opening to the living room does away with the typical confinement and makes this foyer a gracious reception center. At the rear of the living room in an ell, are the remaining three steps to the main level.

Both the exterior treatment and the welcome innovation inside give the house some of the flavor of a split-level, but the essential economies of a bi-level remain. Basically it still is a one-story house with the basement lifted out of the ground to make the cellar space habitable.

The architect of the handsome and somewhat revolutionary dramatic balcony separating it from the dining room.

Another feature is the additional staircase in the left rear corner—in the housekeeping area where it is needed most. The stairs lead directly from the kitchen (and the terrace porch and back yard) to the downstairs laundry, and from there to the lower foyer.

Thus you can go to the kitchen from any of the exterior entrances, including the front door and garage, without ever passing through the main living area.

Outdoor Living

The porch-terrace combination, enclosed on three sides, is another fine arrangement for those who like outdoor living but at the same time enjoy a little privacy.

Completely set apart in its own wing is the sleeping area, boasting three bedrooms of good proportions. The master bedroom has an adjoining private bath with stall shower. Closet space is excellent in all the rooms.

The main bathroom is ideally located to serve the daily living areas as well as the bedrooms. It is a true family bathroom, with two separate lavatories—not a single counter with two sinks—and has closet space inside the room in addition to the linen closet across the hall.

Third Bath

A third full bath with shower is on the lower level, giving the

The house contains only 1,532 square feet of living area on the main level, including the sunken living room. A bonus space of 640 square feet is on the lower level. Over-all dimensions are 52'8" wide by 35'5" deep.

The exterior is right up to the minute, but the gable gives it a distinctive colonial tone which insures its popularity for years to come.

The "floating" position of the living room not only disposes of the deadly mid-level foyer problem but also helps the room itself. It is set apart, as a special place, which plainly adds to its formality.

Paint Pointers Help Parents in Fix-up Projects

Child's Bedroom Needs Frequent Decoration Work

The one room in the house which is probably subjected to the most wear and tear and requires the most frequent clean-up is also the room that should be the most cheerful. This is the child's room. Parents frequently are met with the sight of John's last artistic effort on the door, the place on the wall where he drew an outline of his brother in indelible ink, the dots on the ceiling from the night they used it for target practice with their slingshots and ink cartridges. Subsequent decision: a fresh paint job will do wonders for the room.

In selecting the proper type and color coating for this room, there are some basic facts the homeowner should remember. Armed with information about type and color, the resulting paint job will be a source of satisfaction for him and of pleasure for his children.

Questions Answered

What, then, should be considered when choosing paint for a child's room? The following are questions which should be answered by and for the handyman for a successful paint job. Is the paint sturdy and able to withstand much art-work and many cleanings? What type of surface will he be painting on? Where is the room located? What color should be used?

A latex paint is generally the best bet for the "do-it-yourselfer" when painting most ordinary walls and ceilings. It is easily applied, gives a smoother appearance, leaves no lap marks, and dries quickly. It can be cleaned frequently with soap and water, and the cleaning up after the painting can also be done with soap and water. Many latex paints require a 30-day curing period before they can be washed or cleaned.

Also, a few latex paints on the market today have a gloss or semi-gloss finish.

A standard for painting children's rooms has been the alkylid or oil base paint. The alkylid paints are available in gloss or semi-gloss finishes. They will also withstand many and frequent cleanings. However, alkylids are not quite as easy to apply and still achieve a smooth surface, there is a slight odor during drying, and post-painting clean up is not quite as simple.

Factual Information

Armed with factual information about types of paint, the handyman and his wife can now get down to the choice of color. Color is relative to the location of the room and the type of paint decided upon. In a room with a northern exposure, a light color with a gloss or semi-gloss finish will reflect existing light and artificial light to a better advantage, than will a flat finish of a darker color. If the room has a southern exposure, then a darker color with a flat finish may be used. If the type of paint lends itself to frequent cleaning, a light color may be used. If not, then the color may well be one which will not tend to show even the slightest bit of grime and dirt, such as a sandy beige. The handyman should also remember that brightness can be added to a child's room in accent colors, either in painted furniture or in the fabrics used.

Above all, when painting a child's room, remember the child himself. He should be able to "live" in his room. The room should be bright and cheerful so that a rainy day spent inside is not so depressing after all. A child spends varying amounts of time in his room, from an entire day to a few minutes spent there between dashes outside to play. The room should be a reflection of his own cheerful personality.

4 Die in Separate Tragedies in South

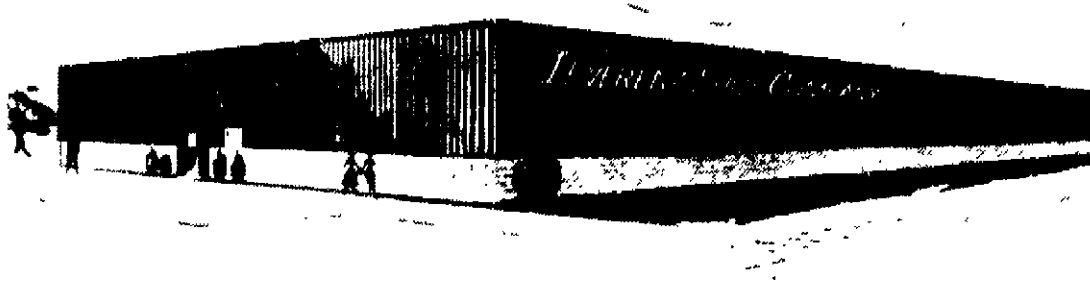

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Violent death came in pairs—four separate times—in Mississippi Thursday in unrelated tragedies.

At Pascagoula, a small plane caught fire on takeoff and crashed, killing Capt. Guy E. Enabuc, 30, of Turner Air Force Base, Ga., the pilot, and his passenger, Edward O. Wisner of Ocean Springs.

Two boys suffocated under tons of sand at Jackson. When concrete plant workers drew off sand from the bottom of a huge pile, Johnny Mullins, 7, and Wayne Jackson, 6, were sucked under the sand. They had been playing unnoticed on the sandpile.

Claude David Pittman, 33, and John Oliver Younger, 34, both of Memphis, Tenn., died in a pre-dawn gun fight at a rural home near Tupelo. Sheriff Frank Carter said they were killed in a shoot-out with Carl Murphy Jr., who said they tried to rob him.

Two brothers, Roger Lamb, 10, and Randle Earl Lamb, 8, drowned while swimming in a private lake near their home in the Carolina community.

This Sketch Shows How the New factory being constructed for the Leverenz Shoe Co., at New Holstein, will look when it is completed. The building will replace a smaller unit now operating in New Holstein.

But Air's Still Cheaper

Everything From Syrup to Nuts Used to Fill Automobile Tires

BY DICK GRIFFIN
Chicago Daily News Service

Glue was a pretty fair filler for auto tires back in the early days when air was used chiefly for inflating, but it gummed up the roads too badly when a flat developed.

Glue isn't the only oddball filler that the nation's genuine geniuses, ersatz experimenters and garden variety nuts have used to inflate tires.

Others during the Inventors' Period in auto history—1900 to 1930—were syrup, glycerine, rosin, beeswax, rubber, dry cork "flour," powdered aluminum flakes, arsenic, sawdust, shellac, borax, formaldehyde, asbestos and gelatin.

Also, tennis balls, table tennis balls, wood blocks (?), sand, felt, rope, foam rubber, coil springs, metal rings, talcum powder mixed with limestone and acid, vegetable oils and rags.

Also, nitrogen, hydrogen, helium, carbon dioxide, auto exhaust gases and water.

Look Into Future

The sources for this amazing list of inventiveness are two experts from Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., whose jobs are to look into the future for their products.

Apparently a knowledge of his air bottle process for inflation that made it a little safer to work with.

They are Walter J. Lee, Goodyear's director of tire development, and M. B. Riggs of the company's tire design research section. Lee said that with all the old experiments, and some continuing today, nobody has ever devised a cheaper and more convenient filler than air.

Cork was extremely popular in the early days and several methods using it were patented and marketed.

One method was to fill a tire's fabric or leather inner casing with wet compressed cork. It was porous and full of air and had more bounce than rubber. In fact, the developer swore it rode almost as well as standard pneumatic tires.

The liquid fillers—glue, syrup, beeswax, etc.—were mixed under heat in combination with other materials, then injected into the tire.

This formed a solidified, resilient mass—or, sometimes, mess—as on hot days.

Air's Cheaper

Goodyear said nitrogen, which creates less oxidation inside a tire than air, outlasted hydrogen and helium as inflators, and is still on a busy street and have to chase tennis balls all over the street, or have an angry traffic cop watch as he scrapes up the spilled syrup?

Esthetics doubtless had something to do with the popularity of tire than air, outlasted hydrogen and helium as inflators, and is still on a busy street and have to chase tennis balls all over the street, or have an angry traffic cop watch as he scrapes up the spilled syrup?

New Holstein Site of New Shoe Factory

Sheboygan Firm To Double Its Present Output

SHEBOYGAN — The Leverenz Shoe Co. has announced plans for a new factory being constructed in New Holstein. Behind the plain modern exterior of the 23,000-square foot building will be a combination of the most modern shoe manufacturing equipment available. The building will be fully air conditioned for the maximum quality control of the shoes manufactured and for the comfort of the employees. In addition, highly modern work transporters are being designed for several departments, making this factory the first men's Goodyear welt plant with a transporter installation of this type.

The system will incorporate the new concept in shoe making technology called "heat setting", which will assure the maximum shape retention in shoes.

The new factory will be 30 per cent larger in capacity than the three units now operated, and will replace the smaller unit now operating in New Holstein.

The factory is being built by the Todajem Corp. of New Holstein and the old Leverenz factory will be exchanged with Todajem for the new one when completed as part of the transaction.

The new factory will be ready for occupancy in September and it is anticipated that production can be maintained without disrupting service to customers.

St. Martin Lutheran Parish Names Group For Mission Fair

CLINTONVILLE — Committees were chosen at the Thursday meeting of the Ladies Aid of St. Martin Lutheran Church to serve the Mission Fair in October. A committee also was appointed to plan a confirmation reunion for July 28 at Walter A. Olen Park.

The Rev. William Christian led devotions at the meeting of the Ladies Aid.

Mrs. Christian, Mrs. Esther Schmidt and Mrs. Bernard Knapp Sr. presented a skit, "Always A Christian All Ways."

Mrs. Herman Schmoll reported that she had received a letter of appreciation from the Bethesda Lutheran Home, Watertown, for the trading stamps sent them by the various organizations which enabled the home to purchase a bus and laundry equipment.

The Ladies Aid voted to continue selling vanilla extract as a chairman.

A committee also was appointed to plan a confirmation reunion to be held July 28 at Walter A. Olen Park.

Members of the entertainment committee Thursday afternoon were Mrs. Glenn Kluth, Mrs. Elmer Baerenwald and Mrs. Louis Klemp.

Lunch was served by Mrs. August Westphal, Mrs. Edwin Westphal, Mrs. Walter Westphal, Mrs. Leonard Wegner, Mrs. Arnold Wedde, Mrs. Arthur Wisniewski, Mrs. Joe Zehren, Mrs. Henry Zuhse, Mrs. Elmer Baerenwald, Mrs. Victor Bartz, Mrs. Elder Bevenitz and Mrs. Edgar Blanke.

Valders Firm Seeks Okay to Build Plant

New London Permit To Depend on Study Of Present Facilities

NEW LONDON — Walter Schoenrock, city building inspector, Friday said he would inspect the soil service center of Farmers Union Central Exchange at Valders today, and, if it meets the definition of a fertilizer blending plant, he would issue a building permit for a similar plant at New London to Farmers Union.

The firm plans to build a soil service center at the end of Avon Street near the Green Bay and Western Railroad tracks.

Schoenrock had denied the firm a permit, because, he said, he wanted the board of appeals to determine whether the plant would manufacture or blend fertilizer. Zoning laws allow a blending plant at the site, but not a manufacturing plant.

The denial was scheduled to be aired by the board of appeals Thursday, but it was discovered that the appeal was made on form not complying with city ordinances.

Schoenrock had signed the appeal. Ordinances require the aggrieved party to sign the appeal, and list reasons for appealing the decision. Farmers Union then suggested that Schoenrock issue the permit and let protesting parties take out an injunction against it.

Francis A. Werner, attorney for Hamilton and Sons Canning Co. and Foods Inc., a party protesting building of the proposed plant, said he did not know if the firm would try to obtain an injunction against construction if the permit is issued.

Net Tournaments Scheduled at Neenah Courts

NEENAH — The city junior boys singles tennis tournament will be played at 1 and 4:30 p.m. Monday at the Doty Park courts. All boys who were under 18 last Jan. 1 are eligible.

The senior men's tournament also will begin at 4:30 p.m. Monday at Doty Park. Men over 30 are eligible.

The women's doubles meet is slated for 4:30 p.m. Tuesday at Doty. Women and girls may enter by reporting at the courts. The girls' 16 and under doubles is scheduled at 9 a.m. Thursday at the high school courts and the boys' 16 and under doubles is slated for 9 a.m. Friday at Doty.

King Infirmary Residents Honored at Fremont Picnic

FREMONT — The Red Cross Gray Ladies of Waupaca County recently held a picnic for the people of King infirmary. The event, held in Fremont at the village hall, included a bus trip from king for the 37 residents and Miss Genevieve Remmel, matron.

Fremont Gray Ladies Mrs. Hilda Abraham, chairman, and Mrs. Sadie Hass, co-chairman, were assisted by 25 Gray Ladies from Fremont, Weyauwega, Waupaca and Wild Rose and one Gray Man, Frank Haltnier. Weyauwega, in serving the lunch and arranging for entertainment.

Musical entertainment was provided by eight children of the Frank Secker family of Oshkosh. Piano accordion solos were presented by Arlene Zabel, Weyauwega, Union High School student.

Present at the event were the Rev. and Mrs. Ralph Holliday, who are active with Gray Lady service; and two charter members, Mrs. Hilda Abraham, Fremont, and Mrs. Viola Paulson, Waupaca.

6,692 Attend Neenah Parks

NEENAH — Total attendance last week at the eight Neenah playgrounds was 6,692, according to playground officials.

This total includes Cook, 716; Doty, 725; Douglas, 539; Green, 751; Hoover, 968; Laudan, 1,302; Taft, 855; and Washington, 836.

Playground activities in the various parks for Monday include Cook, 2 p.m., broad jump tryouts; Doty, 6:30 p.m., volleyball practice; Douglas, 6:30 p.m., broad jump tryouts; Green, 2:30 p.m., craft day; Hoover, supervised game activities, exercises every evening of the week; Laudan, 6:30 p.m., play-off for broad jump; Taft, 2 p.m. junior olympics tryouts, 6:30 p.m., group games for eight year olds and over; and Washington, 2:30 p.m., broad jump for junior olympics.

Bob Charles Tips Rodgers By 8 Strokes

New Zealander Becomes First 'Lefty' to Win a Major Title

ST. ANNE'S, England (AP)—Bob Charles, a willowy New Zealander with the sensitive putting touch of a safe-cracker, smashed Phil Rodgers of La Jolla, Calif., by eight strokes Saturday in their 36-hole playoff for the British Open title and became the first left-hander ever to win a major golf championship.

Charles, 27, called the "lefty Hogan" by Scottish admirers, fired sub-par rounds of 69-77-140 over the 6,757-yard, par 72 Royal Lytham and St. Anne's course and routed Rodgers, the unimpaired, wise-cracking ex-Marine, who struggled home in 72-76-148. They had tied at 277 at the end of the regulation 72 holes Friday.

Charles, a good-looking, 6-foot-2 stylist who plays with no emotion, applied the pressure to his American foe by knocking in a 45-foot putt at the third hole and taking a lead he never relinquished.

5-Stroke Lead

Putting brilliantly—sinking 20, 30 and 40 footers as if they were kick-ins—Charles went three strokes ahead at the end of the morning round and shot into a five-stroke lead through the 20th hole.

It was at this point that Rodgers, 25, wearing a jaunty baseball cap and swapping jokes with the gallery all around the course, made his only serious surge. Over the next four holes—the 21st through the 24th—he picked up four shots to cut the New Zealander's advantage to a single stroke.

Then the roof fell on the California jester. On the 25th hole, Rodgers took a double bogey six and on the 26th, he holed a shot from 50 feet—the back edge of the green—for a birdie three only to have Charles, a man of ice, sink a 25-foot putt right behind it.

They haired the hole in birdie three, but the American was became more grim. His shots lost some of their zing, and, before he knew it, he was eight down. He lost strokes on six holes in a row.

Became Runaway

The match became a runaway and the crowd, numbering about 2,000 in sunny, breezy weather, deserted in large clusters and trudged back to the club house. Charles not only is the first player from New Zealand to capture so important a prize but also the first man ever to do it swinging a club from the left side.

While southpaws have excelled in baseball, tennis and football it has been a long tradition in golf that this is a game for the right-handers.

"There should be no reason for it," said Charles, who does all other things right-handed. "The courses don't favor the right-handers. I think it's just that players are converted while they're young with the result that golf has few outstanding left-handed teachers."

Hank Fischer Gets Victory In Initial Major League Start; Simmons Is Loser

ST. LOUIS (AP)—A tremendous first-inning home run by Henry Aaron, a three-run shot into the seldom disturbed centerfield shrubbery at Busch Stadium, powered the Milwaukee Braves in a 7-5 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals Saturday.

Aaron's 26th homer provided the edge Milwaukee needed to withstand a three-run ninth by the Cardinals, who collected home runs by rookie Gary Kolb and pinch-hitter Charles James in that inning.

Kolb's home run, his second two-run job in two games, kayoed winner Hank Fischer, James' major league start, to a quick Schneider, who then gave way to Claude Raymond. Raymond got Julian Javier on a foul pop for the final out.

420-Foot Homer

Aaron, who had three hits and scored three runs, hit his 420-foot homer off loser Curt Simmons.

The Win gave the Braves a split in the four-game set and dropped the Cardinals to four place, two percentage points behind the Chicago Cubs and 6½ games behind the National League-leading Los Angeles Dodgers.

Aaron's homer, following lead-off walks to Frank Bolling and Ed Mathews, staked young Fischer, a southpaw making his first major league start, to a quick cushion.

The Cardinals, who now have lost 10 of 13 games since leading the league by 1½ games June 29, finally broke through in the fifth when two singles and an error loaded the bases. A run scored on a double play.

St. Louis counted again in the sixth, but by then Milwaukee had run up a 5-2 lead and had chased Simmons. The Braves scored twice in the third, after a rain-caused delay of one hour and eight minutes.

Streaking LA Pounds Mets For 15 Hits

Nate Oliver Socks First Major League Homer in 11-2 Win

NEW YORK (AP)—The streaking Los Angeles Dodgers won their sixth in a row Saturday handing the New York Mets their 14th straight defeat 11-2 on a 15-hit attack and Bob Miller's 6-hit pitching.

Wally Moon hit his seventh home run and a triple, driving in three runs. Nate Oliver, a late-inning replacement for Junior Gilliam but his first major league homer off Larry Bearnarth in the eighth. Gilliam had driven in two runs with three straight singles before he took a rest.

Miller, a 1-12 pitcher for the Mets last year, won his sixth. It was his first complete game since April 25 when he whipped Cincinnati Tracy Stallard, knocked out in the second, lost his seventh.

Frank Thomas's two-run homer in the fourth accounted for the Met runs.

The victory boosted the Dodgers' lead over the San Francisco Giants to six full games.

Pennel Sets Record

Early Wynn Finally Gets Victory No. 300

LONDON (AP)—John Pannel of Miami, Fla., sent the world pole-vaulting mark soaring to new heights Saturday when he cleared 16 feet, 8 3/4 inches—highest any man has vaulted outdoors—in the British Track and Field Championships at White City Stadium.

Tuning up for America's impending dual meet with the Soviet Union later this month, the 22-year-old graduate of Northeast Louisiana State University soared over the bar at the record height on his first attempt—and left the arena not knowing exactly how well he had done.

He made a couple of tries at the bar at 17 feet and 1 1/4 inch, but failed.

"That 17-foot jump is going to come," he said, as he packed up his gear and started back to the hotel. He thought he had vaulted 16 feet, 8 3/4 inches.

Confusion Results

The confusion came in the translation of the jump from meters to feet and inches. The bar was set at 5.038 meters and the announcer at the meet belloyed over the loud speaker system that

Lee Thomas Comes Through With Two-Run Triple

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Lee Thomas, one of the season's biggest busts, hit a decisive two-run triple Saturday as the Los Angeles Angels pulled out of a 10-game losing streak by defeating the New York Yankees 3-1.

Despite the loss, the Yankees retained their 5½-game American League lead. Second-place Boston was beaten 6-4 by Minnesota.

The Angels, ending the longest string of losses in their three-season history, got only four hits off Jim Bouton and Marshall Bridges and needed a Yankee error to pull off the decisive two-run flurry in the third inning.

Leadoff man Jim Fregosi reached base on an error by Bobby Richardson and Albie Pearson drew a walk. Thomas scored them both with a slicing triple to left-center.

Thomas, who batted 290 last season and drove in 104 runs, came into this game hitting only .219 and hadn't batted in a run in two weeks.

Dean Chance was the winning pitcher, with a brilliant job of relief by Art Fowler, Fowler came in the seventh with the bases filled and one out, and got Richardson on a foul pop and Tom Tresh on a ground out. He then finished, allowing the Yanks a single in the ninth.

The Angels had scored their first run an inning earlier on consecutive singles by Felix Torres, Charley Dees and Billy Moran.

The Yanks got 10 hits but could score only in the fourth, when Joe Pepitone opened with a single, took third on a single by Elston Howard and came home when John Blanchard grounded into a double play.

John Galbraith Prepares to End Public Service

Economist to Return To Harvard After Working in India

NEW DELHI, India, (AP)—John Kenneth Galbraith slouched in his chair, sandalled feet on a coffee table, in an effort to keep his 6-foot-8 frame from towering too tall. Galbraith, who leaves Monday for home, reflected in an interview on the problems of India's 461 million persons. The average person has an income of $70 a year. Galbraith listed the basic problems as an uncontrolled increase in population, insufficient progress in raising agricultural production, low industrial efficiency and competitiveness of exports, and lack of jobs. The greatest problem is the increase in population by about 10 million a year. The Indian economy has to run hard just to keep up with this rising demand, and run even harder to improve living standards.

Hodgkins Disease

Benefit Planned for Kaukauna Man With Rare Blood Disorder

BY EDWARD VAN BERKEL Post-Crescent Staff Writer

KAUKAUNA—Although Kaukauna has grown to a city of more than 10,000 population, its reputation as "The Friendly City" has never changed. There was evidence of that this week when a benefit dance was planned for a person in need.

Friends and classmates of John Noonan, 29 119 W. 13th St., have been aware of his failing health over the years and the number of times he has been confined to hospitals.

Friends thought of his wife and two small children, Janet, 6, and Jan, 4 and the love they had for their husband and father. John was a strong, healthy lad in high school and one of the stars on the football squad until his graduation in 1951. Later he joined the navy and served aboard ship in the Pacific Theater during the Korean War.

Construction Work Following his four years in service, he took a job with a construction firm as a mason tender, doing hard physical labor. Later an opportunity presented itself for an office job in a lumber firm. Because the work was steady and more desirable, he changed jobs.

It was while employed at the lumber firm he noted a swelling in his neck and a gradual loss in weight. A thorough physical examination was called for. The result — diagnosis of Hodgkins disease.

The blood disease similar to leukemia except it strikes the white rather than red corpuscles, is one for which little can be done. Since 1960, he has been in and out of hospitals continuously and worked only periodically.

Hospital stays quickly used up the money Noonan was able to make during brief periods of work. For a time weekly blood transfusions were necessary.

Lately he has been required to make weekly trips to Madison where he is confined for treatment and examination at the veterans' center at Wisconsin General Hospital for one or two days each week.

Losing Weight His weight has dropped from 180 pounds to less than 130. He must rest and is able to be up and around for only a few hours at a time. Noonan and his family are not despondent. They look to the future, hoping and praying God will return Noonan to health.

His classmates and friends, realizing his plight, have planned a benefit dance for Aug. 11 at Van Abel's. Holland, Music from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. will be furnished by an area orchestra.

Donations Made Thimany Pulp and Paper Co. and Badger Northland have made donations to the committee in an effort to help the Noonan family as well as make the benefit a success.

Plans call for the committee to contact other industries and business places in the area, seeking donations or merchandise which could be auctioned at the dance to help raise additional funds. Tickets for the affair are being offered for sale by committee members and business places.

Serving on the planning committee are Miss Joan Caspersen, Robert Borree, David Heindel, John Haen, Miss Eugene Vander Steen, Mrs. Clifford Vander Steen, John Dietzler and Miss Cal Engelson.

Plans Set for Aviation Event

Fly-In, Dive-In Aug. 4 to Feature Parachute Jumps

NEW LONDON — New London Aviation, Inc. will offer free airplane rides and picnic meals at its fourth annual "Dive-In-Fly-In" at the club's airport on State 54 about three miles east of here, beginning at 7.30 a.m. Aug. 4.

The program will be highlighted by stunt flying and, tentatively, parachute demonstrations and sky-diving. The flying club plans to have 12 pilots and 11 airplanes, available to take spectators on free flights.

The group also will sell pan cakes, sausage, coffee and other refreshments until the program closes at 9.30 p.m. In case of inclement weather, the event will be postponed until Aug. 11.

Last year, the fly-in drew about 1,000 spectators. About 100 people got free rides, according to Hilbert Berkahn, president of the organization.

Improve Airport Proceeds of the event will go to improve the club's airport. The port, currently housing eight planes, has eight hangars and two runways, each 2600 feet long. In the past year, the group installed electrical service in the hangars purchased a heating unit to warm up planes during the winter and bought a mower-tractor to keep up the runways.

Berkahn said the club has 250 members, with approximately 20 of them having at least a student pilot license.

Agitation in Ceylon

Buddhists Step Up Tempo Of Anti-Catholic Action

BY DENZIL PEIRIS

COLOMBO, Ceylon (AP)—Buddhist sentiment is being stirred up against Roman Catholics in Ceylon in the wake of South Viet Nam's religious troubles. Yellow-robed Buddhist monks have led big processions through tropical Colombo in recent weeks protesting events involving Buddhists in Catholic-ruled Viet Nam, 2,000 miles away.

The monks demand that Buddhist rights in Viet Nam be protected and that "Catholic action" in Ceylon be investigated by the government.

By linking the two the monks evidently aim to convince Ceylonese Buddhists that the Catholic minority could oppress them as it is accused of doing in Viet Nam. Catholics form only about 6 per cent of Ceylon's population of 10 million. Buddhists 80 per cent, about the same as in Viet Nam. But Catholics long enjoyed preferment in Ceylonese public life out of proportion to their numbers. They still hold some key posts—the commander-in-chief of the Army, for example, is a Catholic. All of this came about under British rule because Catholics, many of them descended from European colonists, took pains to educate their children in English, the language of government. After independence, the vast Buddhist population awoke politically. Its leaders began political action to replace non-Buddhists in government posts.

Buddhist Action Buddhist bhikkus — monks — helped elect Solomon W. R. Bandaranaike prime minister in 1956, on a platform of benefits for Buddism. These included replacement of English by the Sinhalese language in government work, to the detriment of Christians and Tamil-speaking Indian Hindus on the island.

Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike, who became prime minister after her husband was shot by a disgruntled bhikku, was persuaded several years ago to take over nearly all Roman Catholic schools for the government.

Buddhists have gradually been replacing Catholics in top positions.

Accompanying this has been a whispering campaign against "Catholic action." The Catholic church uses this term for laymen's religious work but in Buddhist slogan it takes on a sinister meaning of political conspiracy.

The whole situation has been just great for the Communists. Their line is that the United States and President Kennedy, a Roman Catholic, are responsible for anti-Buddhist action in Viet Nam, because they are keeping President Ngo Dinh Diem, a Roman Catholic, in power there.

Reds and Cubs Rained Out After Two Full Innings

CINCINNATI (AP)—Rain caused postponement of Saturday's Cincinnati-Chicago baseball game after two innings of scoreless play.

Play was halted a few minutes before 2 p.m.

The rain let up about an hour later and groundskeepers had the field covers almost removed when the rain started again. The umpires finally called it all off at 3:11 p.m. There had been a one hour, 13 minute holdup.

The Cubs hadn't had a hit off starter Bob Purkey in the first two innings and Frank Robinson's second inning single had been the only safe blow off Chicago starter Larry Jackson.

Jarrett Pulling Up on Stock Car Racing Leader

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP)—Ned Jarrett, of Conover, N.C., slowly is pulling up on NASCAR's stock car racing leader, Joe Watherly of Norfolk, Va.

Grand National points standings released Saturday showed Jarrett within 608 points of Watherly, in front with a 1963 total of 20,548 through 32 races.

Jarrett, a former champ, finished in a race Thursday night at Moyock, N.C. and gained 384 points. Watherly, also a former champion, blew an engine and finished 13th, making only 208 points.

Richard Petty, in third spot after being displaced earlier this week by Jarrett, had trouble with his car's rear end and finished 11th. The Randleman, N.C. driver earned 240 points for the 1963 total of 18,564. Jarrett has 19,940.

National League umpire Augie Donatelli gives out with a giant heave-ho sign as he ejects Philadelphia Phillies manager Gene Mauch from the game with the San Francisco Giants Saturday in Philadelphia. Plate umpire Shag Crawford had warned Phillies hurler Ryne Duren about his finger-wetting style of pitching, and when Mauch complained too bitterly, third base umpire Donatelli threw him out of the game. Phillies third baseman Don Hoak is between Mauch and Duren. The ejection took place in the fourth inning. The Phillies won the game, 4-3. (AP Wirephoto)

Quad Cities Has Midwest Loop's Only Former Major League Player

BY RALPH MUELLER
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

The Quad Cities Angels now have the Midwest League's only active player to perform in the big leagues. He is R. C. Stevens, who played first base for the Pittsburgh Pirates in 1958, '59, and '60.

In fact, Stevens beat out Dick Stuart for the Pirates' first base job in 1958. He was traded to Washington in December of 1959 and was farmed to Toronto in 1961 before going into the service.

The Angels will also have another new veteran player on their roster when they move into play the Foxes next weekend. They have acquired Pete Gongola, who was a batterymate of Dean Chance at Dallas in 1961. Gongola was with Charlotte (Sally League) earlier this season.

Former Foxes' outfielder Roger Sorenson is continuing his batting slump at Stockton in the California League. In his first 25 trips to the plate, Sorenson had only one hit.

Roger is staying with Foxes' been sent to Fort Lauderdale in

Opening Round Pairings for Legion Regional Meets Set

Opening round pairings of regions three and four in the State American Legion Baseball Program have been announced by the state commissioner's office.

Region three has five first round games with Appleton playing at Little Chute, Waupaca at Neenah, Marion at Manawa, Marinette at Clintonville, and Green Bay at Sturgeon Bay. Appleton will be the toss of the coin and will bat last in the game. The team is unable to play at home due to the fact the ball park is being used.

All five of the games are slated through the week ending July 27, for Saturday, July 20, with game times scheduled for 2 p.m. In Region four, the games are to be rescheduled for Saturday night at 8 p.m.

Regional tourney play will continue through the week ending July 27. Bill Winous is the Region three director.

The five contests in Region four will be Winneconne at Menasha, Berlin at Oshkosh, Beaver Dam at Mayville, Columbus at Juneau, and Sheboygan at Fond du Lac.

These five tilts are slated for Friday, July 19, at 8 p.m. Like the ball park is being used, the tournament will continue.

Pirates Blank Houston, 3-0

Vern Law Goes Distance for First Time This Season

PITTSBURGH (AP)—Backed by a pair of home runs by Don Clendenon, Vern Law went the distance for the first time this season as the Pittsburgh Pirates shut out the Houston Colts 3-0 Saturday.

Law, hampered by a series of injuries since he led the Pirates into the 1960 World Series, scattered six singles, struck out two and walked just one man to pick up his fourth victory against three losses.

He was in difficulty only in the fifth when the Colts put two men on with one out. But Law forced the next two men to fly out.

Both of Clendenon's homers, cleared the left field wall and both came with the bases empty—first in the second inning and then again in the eighth. They were his 10th and 11th of the year.

Actually, the Pirates scored the only run they needed in the first when losing pitcher Dick Drott, 2-7, walked leadoff batter Dick Schofield. Schofield stole second, went to third on catcher Jim Campbell's wild throw to second and scored on Bob Clemente's bloop single to right.

Football, Basketball Dates Set for OSC

New Grid Coach, Russ Young, Will Debut Sept. 14

OSHKOSH — A seven-game football card has been announced for this fall by Oshkosh State College Coach Russ Young. The Titans will open at home Sept. 14 against River Falls State.

This will be the first season in over 30 years that the football fortunes of OSC have not been in the hands of Robert Koff. Koff stepped down as football coach last fall.

Young said equipment will be issued Aug. 30 and the first practice session will be Sept. 1. Stout Institute will provide the Titans' homecoming opposition on Oct. 26.

A 19-game basketball schedule also has been announced by Young for the defending Wisconsin State College basketball champions. The coach indicated two more games may be added to the schedule in January.

Included on the schedule are the University of South Dakota at Vermillion, and South Dakota

State University at Brookings, on Jan. 3 and 4. These two games replace the OSC holiday tournament.

The University of South Dakota's schedule this season includes such teams as the University of Iowa, Air Force Academy, University of Oklahoma, Loyola of Chicago, University of Minnesota and Creighton University.

Wisconsin Has Water For Top Boating Fun

From Lake Winnebago to Smallest Canoe Stream, State Beckons All Skippers

Big lakes, little lakes, cruising water in Wisconsin, there are rivers, canoeing streams—what- ever your boating pleasure, Wis- consin has the water.

For its size among the states, Wisconsin has better than its share of the finest recreational waterways in the nation. Hundreds of miles of Great Lakes shore lines, with fine harbors and small boat facilities at handy in- tervals, beckon to cruiser skip- pers. More than 8,000 inland lakes, some settled and others completely wild, range from Win- nebago with its 215 square miles down to postage stamp ponds.

There's Ole Mississippi border- ing Wisconsin on the west, with 230 miles of America's best cruise water. Inland rivers like the Chippewa, St. Croix, Wolf, Rock and Black are popular with out- board skippers and canoe-trippers alike. And nowhere in the land are the names better known to white- water canoeists than Brule, Flam- beau and Namekagon.

Access Points Everywhere the boatman goes in this variety vacationland, there are access points, launching ramps, marinas, and boating facilities of every description. One listing includes 711 improved launching sites, and new ones are being built faster than anyone can keep track. Public access to recreational water is a policy of the state, and one that is prac- ticed for the benefit of boaters from every part of the country. Wherever there are resorts on

Westby Skier Added to U. S. Olympic Squad

LA CROSSE, Wis. (AP)—Lyle Swenson of Westby, Wis., former national junior ski jumping cham- pion, was added today to the United States Olympic Ski Team for 1964.

Paul Mockrud, publicity chair- man of the Snowflake Ski Club, of which Swenson is a member, said he had received a telegram from Malcolm Fairlane, chairman of the U. S. Olympic Ski Commit- tee, announcing Swenson's selec- tion.

Swenson will leave in December for 2½ months training in Eu- rope. He was added as the seventh member of the team.

His omission from the team an- nounced earlier was vigorously protested by local and Midwest ski enthusiasts.

Recently, Lief Mickelson, pres- ident of Snowflake, took the pro- test directly to National Ski As- sociation meeting in San Fran- cisco.

Los Angeles Lakers To Open Season With Royals Oct. 30

LOS ANGELES (AP)—The Los Angeles Lakers of the National Basketball Association will open the 1963-64 campaign here Oct. 30 and Nov. 1 against the Cincinnati Royals—and possibly rookie Jer- ry Lucas.

General Manager Lou Mohs of the Lakers said he feels con- fident Lucas, Ohio State's All- America two years ago, would sign with the Royals. Lucas, 30, signed with Cleveland of the ill- fated American Basketball League. The team never op- erated.

The remainder of the Lakers' schedule will be announced later.

BOTH BARRELS

A petition containing 268 signatures has been sent to Gov. John Reynolds opposing the filling of the north side of the Fox River at the end of Madison and Fox Streets in Menasha as proposed by the Neenah-Menasha Sewage Commission.

Paul Mason, 54 Fox St., Menasha, in a letter to the governor, cited assembly bill 765-A which would authorize the state to grant title to submerged land near the east shore of Little Lake Butte des Morts to the Neenah-Menasha sewerage commission.

"Although it is true the state has given the sewerage commission orders to provide secondary treatment facilities, there is neither necessity or excuse for filling in part of the lake," Mason wrote the governor.

"The people living in the area and the people who fish this lake do not want the said part of it filled in. This portion of the lake is an ideal spawning grounds. It is valuable even in winter when over a hundred fish shanties cover its ice.

"Why forever ruin part of a fine lake when Wisconsin tax- payers pay for the creation of lakes in other parts of the state?" Anybody else have ideas on this subject?

The hot sun of July and August burns from Both Barrels his enthusiasm for serious fishing. Now, when we pack our gear for a junket afield, it's more to find protection from the heat of the city than anything else. The drive that was there in May and June has departed.

Even the boss knows it. No longer does he fuss and fume when we talk about a trip into the north. Maybe he'd even like to come along and, probably, he would except for the press of business in the office.

Actually it would be a good thing if he did for there are wonder- ful places there to ponder the problems of the world.

—O—

But you have to do it right. You have to pick a stretch of water where you are not likely to be disturbed by fish. The key here is you don't want to catch anything. This breaks the concentration.

Pick out a shady spot where there's a rock. Plant your stern on the ground and your back against the cool of the rock. Lean back, look at the sky. Stare into the moody blackness of the water. Listen to the sounds of the forest. Your brow will cool, your mind will relax.

About every half-hour or so you pull in your line, spit on the worm for luck, and pitch it back in the water. Even for a boss this is really living

Light and Variable Winds

On the opening day of the trout a swirl. When the commotion sub- sided I did not wet a fly in a sided and the surface cleared I stream. No place could be found noted with consternation that I where there was not danger that was connected to the bass. There a back cast would hook a spin he was, swimming around with my hied my way to a favorite blue-moth, my fly still fast in the gill hole—a boggy pond back in bluegill's jaw.

It was not hard to imagine what a four pound bass, if aroused, shallow water with a mucky would do to a two ounce fly rod bottom warms fast in the spring and a 2X leader, so I dared not sun so here insect nymphs are, antagonize him. On the other astr early in May. This attractive hand, should he swallow the blue- condition causes large bluegills gill I would be in a still worse to congregate and a small wet fly predicament.

Now this bass was residing in water north of Highway 64 on pos- session of him was illegal and I winding thoroughfare the fly rod did not want him even if I could was unimpaired for action. Stand- have handled him. The idea was ere erect in the boat it was easy to make him let go.

For one to spot the quarry lurking! Well, he swam around there near the mossy banks, some in a while and I kept putting more water so shallow their dorsal fins tension on the line. Finally with protruded. It took some skill to a violent shake of his head he re- drop the fly near the biggest fish gurgitated the bluegill and a few so that it would get the lure ahead other items of his lunch.

The heat-up bluegill was reeled. Two keepers were in the wire in stone dead and after taking it mesh fish bag when a big black off the hook I threw it at the bass bass of the large mouth variety to scare him out of there. He made his appearance. Angling op- did not scare at all for when the erations were suspended to watch bluegill hit the water it disappear- while the fish swam leisurely in another swirl!

The interesting part of this epi- foot of the boat. The bluegills did sole is the quick transformation not panic, they merely got out of of Mr. Bass from a peaceful cili- the way and the bass seemed tozen among lesser brethren into pay no attention to them. Finally a killer when someone got into the big fish found a spot to his trouble.

Manufacturers of bass baits long ago capitalized on this predatory bass attitude. I recall one of the very successful plugs that were resumed. The next bluegill was hooked by first mistake. It was a small one some was placed upon the market—was four or five inches long and it in 1913? On the box in which America two years ago, would was hurriedly dragged, in disgust, it was packaged was printed in toward the boat. As it came to the hold, letters: "Wilson's Fluted signed with Cleveland of the ill- fated American Basketball sudden movement fifteen feet moves through the water like a League. The team never op- away where the bass was lurking, creature in great distress!"

The motion was the surge of his! It was a real fish getter for the powerful tail and the next in several years. Remember? The bluegill disappeared in

2 More Walleyes In Fishing Contest

Six, Seven Pound Pike Landed by Fishermen on Lake Winnebago

Lake Winnebago continues to produce big walleyes for the Post-Crescent's Master Angler fishing contest.

An Appleton man and a rural Neenah angler were the latest to land big pike and thus qualify for prizes in the newspaper's big con- test.

Walter Mayer, 308 E. Wilson St., entered a 7 pound, 9 ounce walleye which he hooked and landed while fishing off Waverly Beach.

Lee Burdick, route 1, Neenah, brought in a 6 pound, 13-ounce walleye.

Mayer's big pike was part of a 5-fish limit he landed off Waverly. The rest of the fish were near the smaller average of pike coming from Winnebago. Mayer said his big pike came as a complete surprise. "I was using a 4-pound test line on my spinning rig," he said, "and I had a trout landing net."

After the fish hit Mayer played it carefully keeping only slight pressure on the thread-thin line. When the pike tired, Mayer scooped it over the side of the boat with the tiny net. The walleye had hit a small, yellow jig bait.

Night Crawler

Burdick's lunger bit on a straight hook decorated with a big night crawler.

Thirty-two fish in seven species divisions have now been entered in the Master Angler contest which runs through September.

First prize winners in each di- vision will receive a spinning reel-line combination worth over $65.

And while the number of qual- ifying fish continues to grow a lot of good fish which are just shy of qualifying weight are be- ing brought in to registration sta- tions.

Contest rules prohibit the entry of frozen fish or fish which have been gutted and gilled.

Woman Gives Birth to Baby 2 Days After Taking Golf Meet Lead

GRINNELL, Iowa (AP)—Mrs. John Allen took the lead in the Grinnell city women's golf meet with a 43 last Wednesday.

Friday she gave birth to a 5 pound, 8 ounce boy.

Mrs. Allen said she plans to play the third round next Wednes- day. She has an 89 at the halfway point in the 36-hole meet, which is played nine holes at a time on Wednesday for four weeks.

Water Conditions Improved In Major Nesting Areas; Local Waterfowl Hatch Good

BY JAY REED
Post-Crescent Outdoor Editor

Prairie surveys made by Ducks Unlimited show an over-all in- crease in breeding waterfowl from 1962.

This encouraging news should cheer Fox Cities duck hunters who are keeping a close watch on waterfowl trends for a sign of what to expect in duck hunting regulations this fall.

Although the dog days of sum- mer have not yet arrived it's not ducks. The situation is being watched closely by Ducks Unlim- ited and reports up to now are en- couraging. Most of the increase has taken place in Saskatchewan, according to DU, but there is rea- son to look for better things in the other major breeding grounds of Manitoba and Alberta.

This is what DU has to say: "Improved habitat conditions in northern Alberta, northwestern Saskatchewan and southwestern Saskatchewan have resulted from heavy rains of last August and the quick, early spring. Southeastern Saskatchewan has benefited particularly from much above normal rain- fall since April 1. Rainfall in southern Manitoba has also been well above normal since April 1.

"The season is early. Pintail and mallard broods have appear- ed in volume at least a week ahead of normal."

Breeding conditions in Wiscon- sin have been excellent through most of the spring. Water levels remained consistently high and there appears to be an excellent hatch of "local" ducks.

Mississippi River This writer surveyed the key Mississippi River bottom land and, from the most practical van- tage point of all—a canoe—we saw nesting ducks in great prom- ision. Mallards seem to be doing best of all in Wisconsin.

Earlier this spring we jumped ducks—mostly mallards — from every little pothole we'd walk by while touring wooded areas. We saw nesting ducks in great prom- ision. Mallards seem to be doing best of all in Wisconsin.

Ontario Province is not regard- ed as one of the major duck breeding areas of the north but conditions there can be looked upon as a sort of yardstick for measuring waterfowl possibilities.

Ontario Province The writer and Photographer Ed Deschler spent two weeks in northern Ontario last month. We saw a lot of ducks. Water condi- tions there were good and mal- lards were nesting in growths of tag alders and marsh grass. We saw a lot of Redheads which dicates that breed might be re- covering after several years of absolute protection from gunners.

There have been recurring fears among duck hunters that there would be no duck season at all next fall.

This seems a remote possibility based on information now avail- able. There are two major rea- sons for believing this will not come to pass. One is purely fi- nancial. A great deal of money is at stake in waterfowl stamp sales to say nothing of the funds which are spent at retail by mil- lions of hunters. It seems unlik- ely the government would risk loss of these monies unless the situa- tion becomes extremely serious.

Water Conditions The second is that conditions have appeared to improve consid- erably over the last couple of years. Water conditions have been better, for the most part, cleared, and several interesting and waterfowl production has, at struggles for a place on the squad, not fallen behind the kill.

The flight last fall, while not Sware has designed Roman magnificence, wasn't bad and there Gabriel as his No. 1 quarterback, was generally good hatch of local a distinction Gabriel finally ducks to withstand early hunter pressure.

But veteran Zeke Bralkowski is! It seems not too far out of line. All-America Terry Baker from similar to last year when the All-Star game at Chicago in one of which could be a mallard or a combination bag of up to four birds including one mallard, one woodcock and two bluebirds or four bluebirds.

Use Pork Rind To Decorate Any Type Lure

'Hawg Gashes' Rate As Tough, Durable, Attractive Bait

You can decorate a lure in many ways. . . to make it more enticing, more effective.

Of all the "additives" that can be combined with regular offer- ings, observe fishing authorities: nothing heats a hunk of pork.

Regardless of the species being sought, they say, this particular adornment will work miracles from the seashore, through the warm water areas, to the haunts of the arctic graying.

The pork rind, known variously as "hawg gashes" or "pickled eels," also is available in shapes, sizes and colors specifically de- signed to arouse the feeding in- stincts of nearly every fish that swims. From bluegills to mus- kies, sails to salmon, a chunk of pork has been the downfall of many a reluctant battler.

Use On All Lures Strips of this artificial-natural bait may be attached to prac- tically all lures. They are deadly as eels hooked to weedless spoons or jigs. Matchstick-thin strips tail- ing a spinner give that added strike-producing wiggle. Some pork comes in the form of "pills," apparently imitating bite-size sal- mon eggs that summon trout so well. For certain occasions, mere shavings, called "flicks," impaled on a plain hook will do the trick with bluegill, yellow perch and crappie.

Versatility of pork rind is over- shadowed only by durability. No bait has its staying power, the ability to remain fresh hour after hour. None matches its toughness when combating short strikes and flogging. And you can't lose it dur- ing a cast.

Pack some pork next time. The fish will love it.

Commissioner James A. Despins, right, of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, Green Bay, was in a serious mood at this press conference when he announced Kimberly-Clark Corp. and union officials had agreed to a moratorium which eventually led to agreement on a new contract and averted a strike this past week. Carried the Ball

Mediator Despins Had Big Role in K-C Settlement

BY WILLIAM C. CAREY
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Genial James A. Despins has been handling labor-management "hot potatoes" for the past 20 years and still is going strong with the U. S. Mediation and Conciliation Service.

Despins' talent as a federal mediator was in the limelight in recent weeks when he assisted officials of the Kimberly - Clark Corp. and two of its AFL-CIO affiliated unions to reach agreement on a new contract.

It wasn't easy, but as Despins put it, "I would not say it was the toughest assignment I have ever had."

Despins recalled that he had "survived" the Kohler Co. negotiations, covering the firm's two major labor disputes over a period of several years.

The 58-year-old Despins arrived at Neenah the last week in June after company and union officials had broken off negotiations and things were generally considered in a state of shambles.

It was but a matter of a few days and Despins had the show back on the road and negotiations resumed under terms of a mutual moratorium.

The task of the federal mediator is an ulcer - provoking one in every instance. The mediator does not take sides—he attempts to assist both sides and strives to keep the door open to compromise.

No Authority

Despins, like any other federal mediation commissioner, has no authority to make any party in a dispute abide by his wishes, but he constantly strives for mutual agreements which are binding so that across - the - table talks can proceed in an orderly manner.

In the Kimberly - Clark dispute, representatives of both labor and management have indicated their mutual respect for Despins who is firm but fair and still manages to maintain a sense of humor, which doesn't hurt a bit either.

"As for the ulcers, I'm happy to say that I don't belong to the club," Despins commented.

Although not fully understood by the general public, his field is a highly specialized one. The annual pay of a commissioner can range from $11,000 to $14,000.

Year-Around Job

Despins' year-around job is to assist in the settlement of labor-management disputes. Every new contract session in which Despins is called in represents another new challenge regardless of the size of the dispute or the participants.

Mediators like Despins always are optimistic—they have to be because often no one else is and objectivity gets lost in the shuffle.

Needless to say, the K-C contract talks were most complicated and much was gained by shuffling a portion of them to Chicago. Despins handled the show alone although the Chicago regional directors stood by just in case.

Some Take Turns

That Despins was able to carry the ball throughout the trying ordeal reflects his ability as a commissioner. In many disputes it is necessary to call in teams of mediators who take turns at trying to find an opening that might lead to the long road to mutual understanding and agreement.

Despins will be the first to admit that in the K-C negotiations, or any other disputed situation, there is always a crucial point which makes things touch-and-go. Getting the parties to agree to a moratorium and a short cooling off period was probably Despins' ace in the local dispute.

His daily reports to the press on the progress of negotiations were tense and to the point, and not until authorized to do so did he speak for either party.

Labor Background

Despins, born in Marinette May 26, 1905, has had a full labor background. Prior to becoming a member of the U. S. Mediation and Conciliation staff, he was on the Michigan State Mediation Board, with offices at Lansing and Detroit. In his two decades with the federal service, he had been assigned to district offices in Detroit, Minneapolis, Escanaba, Milwaukee and Green Bay.

There are three commissioners at the Green Bay office. This is Despins' second tour of duty there. Despins, his wife Bernice, and their three children, call 1530 Biemerdt St., Green Bay, home.

The Despins have two sons, James H., a teacher of retarded children at Green Bay West High School, who formerly taught at Morgan School here, and Tom, a junior at the University of Wisconsin, and a daughter, Mrs. Wesley Burriss of Tulsa, Okla.

Despins is interested in all sports and is "just too busy" to be active in various organizations. He is a member of St. Agnes Catholic Church and the Knights of Columbus.

Patented Grin

A man of stocky build, Despins is a bundle of energy and has a patented grin which serves as a tip-off that "things are moving".

One thing is certain about Despins—when the pressure is really on and the situation is such that

Police Advise One Last Check

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

"I can't understand how it happened," one unhappy vacationer recently complained to police when she discovered her home had been entered by burglars. "Everyone in the neighborhood knew we were gone."

"Everyone in the neighborhood," probably included the "cat" burglar, the "sneak thief" or the "second story" man whose busy season begins during the early weeks of the annual vacation season.

In anticipation of an increase in the number of home break-ins, local police agencies are appealing to homeowners to take one last look around before turning the house key and heading for far away places.

The burglar has no better informant than the talkative housewife who "spills" her family's vacation plans in the supermarket, the beauty parlor or the coffee shop.

Vacation plans are best left undiscussed throughout the neighborhood, police say, and as little as possible be let out as to when you are leaving and how long you plan to stay.

Take a close friend or a neighbor into your plans, but avoid discussing the trip in the presence of strangers.

Avoid Newspapers

Above all, avoid making formal announcements in the newspapers about your trip until you have returned. The successful burglar or sneak thief is an avid reader of the society page.

The house burglar, unlike his more determined counterpart, the safecracker, will take the quickest and easiest path to his booty. Seldom do police find a home that has been entered through force. Often an open window, a long-broken pane of glass, an unlocked door or even an open milkchute provide all the entry needed.

2-Day Reading Institute Opens At OSC Monday

Boston, Marquette University Teachers Guest Speakers

OSHKOSH — A professor of education at Marquette University and a lecturer at Boston University will be the principal speakers at a two-day institute on reading Monday and Tuesday at Wisconsin State College, Oshkosh.

Designed for library science and education students, the institute, titled "Encouraging Variety in Your Developmental Reading Program," will feature experts discussing the challenge to the classroom teacher in the teaching of reading.

The speaker Monday morning is Dr. Patricia Cianciolo, assistant professor of education at Marquette University. She also is coordinator of the elementary student teaching program at the university and is director of the teaching internship program.

Dr. Cianciolo will speak on "individualizing Reading with Children's Literature."

On Tuesday morning the speaker will be Dr. Nancy Santeuseno, lecturer at Boston University and Salem State Teachers College and language arts consultant in the Lynnfield, Mass., public schools. She will speak on "Encouraging Variety in Your Developmental Reading Program."

Panel Members

Members of a panel for Monday afternoon will be Robert Stenson, Webster Stanley Junior High School teacher; Mrs. Mary Carter, Fond du Lac teacher; Harry Werner, Lake Mills library supervisor, and Miss Nia E. Nickel, Bradenton, Fla., teacher.

On Tuesday afternoon, the panel will consist of Richard Smith and Dr. Norman J. Frenzel. OSC faculty members: Mrs. Ruth Freiburger, New Holstein librarian, and Bernard Frankowiak, Ripon High School librarian.

Co-chairmen of the institute are Miss Helen Wahoski, OSC librarian, and Dr. Jean Caudle, of the OSC education department.

'Safe Job' Planned In Oshkosh

OSHKOSH — The city hall council chambers will be the scene of a "safe cracking" this week as attempts are made to enter a large black safe which has not been opened since about 1936 and to which no one knows the combination.

The safe formerly was used by the municipal court that was housed in the city hall until the courthouse was built. Since then the safe has not been opened and no one knows if anything is in it.

City officials decided the safe should be opened before the city hall is abandoned and razed. A former high school is to be converted into a city hall this fall.

An auction will dispose of many of the "antiques" used in the present city hall once the building is vacated and new furniture moved into the new city hall.

doors and windows. Make a careful check of seldom-used basement windows which may have been left open.

Works Swiftly

Once inside the home, the burglar works swiftly, seeking cash left in sugar bowls, desk drawers, piggy banks and cups and jars. Jewelry from boxes in bedrooms and small appliances which can easily be sold without suspicion also are prizes for the house thief.

The Suspicious Stranger in this posed photograph may be keeping an eye on your vacant home while you are on vacation. Don't foster an open door policy. It may lead to trouble, police warn. (Post-Crescent Photo by Ralph Acker)

Oshkosh Murder Case Baffling

Authorities Question Over 50 Persons About Pratt Stabbing

BY DON CASTONIA
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

OSHKOSH — One month has passed since the baffling and brutal murder of gasoline service station operator Wayne Pratt. Authorities confess they are no closer to the solution of the crime today than they were 32 days ago, the morning after the senseless killing.

More than 50 persons have been questioned since the killing and an even greater number of leads run down. Each has led to a blank wall. Investigators Richard Guenther and Wilbur Fuller have worked fulltime on the case and will continue to do so. Sheriff Richard "Bud" Lowell said.

The 24-year-old Pratt was stabbed and slashed 53 times with a knife and struck on the head with a shovel by an assailant or assailants around 9 p.m. the night of June 12 in his isolated station on U. S. 41 about four miles north of Oshkosh.

Seek Motive

"If we only had a definite motive," Lowell said, "and we definitely saying so, authorities have downgraded robbery as a motive. Investigation has shown that only about $60 was taken, not $200 as originally thought, Lowell said.

All known knife wielders in the state have been checked out, the sheriff added. He said several Michigan service station murders were checked but there was no similarity. A man in Detroit was questioned when he was found carrying a clipping from a newspaper of the crime but he too was cleared.

Four men arrested near Racine for a filling station robbery were questioned but, again, no connection was found.

Lowell said that when he was in Los Angeles 1½ weeks ago to pick up a prisoner he spent time with the Los Angeles police going over murders they have investigated to see if they could determine what type of person would have done the stabbing.

None Like This

But, he said, in their history they never had a killing like this one.

Authorities are hoping something will turn up when the State Crime Laboratory completes its investigation. No report has been received on finger prints found at the scene or on the other physical evidence gathered.

"The crime lab is overburdened with cases, Lowell said, "and we have to wait our turn. The FBI could only be called in on the case if we could issue a John Doe warrant for unlawful flight to avoid prosecution," the sheriff added.

Until a suspect is found, a warrant cannot be issued.

In a sidelight to the case, authorities are still seeking a man who walked away from Winnebago State Hospital the night of the murder. He has been ruled out as a suspect in the case because it has definitely been proved he passed a worthless check in Neenah about the same time the killing took place.

Although most items taken in home burglaries are small, it is not unusual for police to receive reports that entire furnishings from a household have been taken by the sneak thief while a family was on vacation

A burglar will generally "case" or look over a home he is considering entering. Looking for outward signs that show the homeowner is gone and will not be returning for some time. Letters left in the mailbox, newspapers on the lawn and porch, drawn curtains and an unkempt lawn are "clues" the burglar seeks.

Halt Deliveries

To play it safe, police recommend vacationers discontinue their mail during vacation by contacting the post office, halt delivery of newspapers and arrange to have the lawn cared for.

Police recommend against pulling all the shades and even suggest that a small upstairs light be kept burning at all times.

Arrange, if possible, to have a relative or family friend visit the home at irregular times and to make themselves seen in the home and yard.

Report Strangers

If your home is in an area which has been troubled by recent break-ins or if you live near a crowded downtown section, it is wise to report suspicious strangers in your neighborhood at all times.

Police also welcome a telephone call from prospective vacationers telling police of the family's vacation plans. Patrolmen and squad car drivers are then alerted to notice anything unusual about the home or yard while the homeowner is gone.

One last reminder from police before turning that key is to take a general inventory of the home before your vacation so that it is easy to determine if anything is missing when you return. Often the burglar or sneak thief is so successful in his work that he can wipe a home clean of small valuables without the homeowner realizing he had been visited.

10 Cases Already Confirmed; City, County Officials Plan Measures to Help Halt Advance

OSHKOSH — Ten cases of Dutch elm disease in Winnebago County already have been confirmed, and laboratory tests are pending on 14 suspect cases to see if these trees also have the disease, the county agent's office has announced.

Informational meetings will be held this week for city and town officials, park and cemetery personnel and tree trimmers and surgeons to acquaint them with the detection and control of Dutch elm disease.

The meetings will be conducted by Lawrence Fenton of the State Department of Agriculture and County Agent Vernon W. Peroutky.

The meetings will be at 9:30 a.m. Monday at Menominee Park in Oshkosh, at 2:30 p.m. Monday at the Omro city hall, at 8:30 a.m. Tuesday at the Neenah city hall, at 8:30 a.m. Wednesday at the Memorial Building in Menasha and at 8 a.m. Thursday at the Winnebago village hall. After each meeting Fenton will be available for personal services.

Purpose of the meetings is to present the status of Dutch elm disease and discuss control measures which might be undertaken by communities. Information will be given to help the communities cope with the situation if they have no method of burning the wood.

Test Carry-Over

The State Department of Agriculture is making a survey of the carry-over effectiveness of spray materials used last fall or early this spring. They are testing trees sprayed to learn if anything is left in them to kill the beetles.

Of the 10 trees already confirmed as having Dutch elm disease this year, five are south of Oshkosh, four are in Oshkosh and one is west of Neenah. Last year the county had 11 diseased trees of which four were in Oshkosh, six in the Town of Black Wolf south of Oshkosh and one in the Town of Oshkosh.

Most of the 14 suspect cases where laboratory tests now are being conducted are in the Oshkosh and surrounding area. One is in Menasha.

Diseased Area

Most of the diseased trees are in a confined area and in the general vicinity where cases existed previously.

There is an indication that some affected trees are harboring these beetles and serving as a source of infection in healthy trees. Donald J. Tripp, assistant county agent, indicated.

The only way to determine if a tree is diseased, he said, is through a laboratory test by the State Department of Agriculture at Madison. This test is done on the fungus specimens from the suspect tree. A card is sent to the tree owner as well as to the city administrator or county extension office indicating the results of the test.

State Law

Where a tree has been found to be diseased with Dutch elm disease, the owner under state law must remove that tree and have it burned within 30 days after receiving the laboratory test findings.

Persons having trees that might be suspect should contact their city hall or the county extension office. The latter serves as coordinator of control within the county and is responsible for the training and education program of the disease.

"We feel Dutch elm disease is spreading and will continue to spread," Tripp stated. "At the same time it can be held down by sanitation and a spray program in the immediate area of known infected trees."

Reported in 1959

The City of Oshkosh has carried out a spray program for its street trees in a given radius of a suspect tree.

The first case of Dutch elm disease was discovered in the county in 1959. It was first found in Wisconsin in 1956 in six counties and last year was reported in 26 counties. A total of 7,196 cases were diagnosed as positive in 1962.

Sanitation through cutting dead branches out of elm trees and spraying with approved chemicals has been recommended for controlling the spread of the European Bark Beetle which carries the Dutch elm disease. Spraying is best done in early spring or late fall.

Rods, Custom Cars to Vie For Trophies

Second Annual Showing Set Next Weekend in Oshkosh

OSHKOSH — The second annual Oshkosh Torques Club Rod and Custom Car Show will be held next Saturday and Sunday at the Winnebago County Fairgrounds.

More than 50 customized and restored cars will be on display and competing for trophies and cash prizes. Additional entries had to be turned down because of lack of display space, club members said. This is more than triple the number of entries at the first show last summer.

Entries have been received from all over the Midwest and from as far as Kansas.

Miss Valerie Kluge, first runner up in the Miss Oshkosh contest, will reign over the show as "Miss Car Style" and will cut the ribbon to open the show at 11 a.m. Saturday. Show hours are from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. Saturday and from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Sunday.

Very few of these "hot rods" are driven on the streets but are entered mainly in show competition. Owners have put as much as $8,000 in time and materials in customizing the vehicles.

Classes of competition range from unfinished custom to radical custom, competition roadster, dragster and go karts. There are 19 classes in all. In addition to trophies for each class, there are prizes for best paint, best upholstery, best engine compartment, best engineered, best single car display, best club display, best appearing crew and long distance award.

The car voted best of the show receives a $100 prize and a $50 award goes to the most popular car as voted by spectators. Prizes of $50 each also go the best rod and the best custom car.

Eliminations Set for State Fair Entries

OSHKOSH — Winnebago County youth wishing to exhibit cattle at the state fair as part of the county's quota will have an elimination contest at the county fairgrounds starting at 9 a.m. Monday.

Representatives of the county Holstein and Guernsey breeders associations will be on hand to select the entries. The county has a quota of 12 head.

Members of 4-H and FFA groups wishing to exhibit at the Northeast Livestock Show this fall must have their entries in to the county extension office by Friday. All animals must be ear-tagged this year.

Coming activities include a picnic by the Winchester 4-H Club this afternoon at Grace Lutheran Church at Winchester and a picnic by the Busy Hands 4-H Club at Menominee Park in Oshkosh at 7 p.m. Tuesday.

95th Rifle Company Leaving for Camp

Personnel From Oshkosh Unit Will Spend
Two Weeks at Twenty-Nine Palms, Calif.

OSHKOSH — Personnel of the staff members and their duties of the 95th Rifle Co., United States Marine Corps Reserve, will leave for Twenty-Nine Palms, Calif., today for a two-week summer training at Twenty-Nine Palms, Calif., to observe the unit's functioning of the unit. The unit is composed of a five-man unit and a five-man unit. The unit is composed of a five-man unit and a five-man unit. The unit is composed of a five-man unit and a five-man unit.

The 95th Rifle Co., commanded by Capt. G. P. Miley, Milwaukee, made up of men from throughout the Fox River Valley and meets once a month for a full weekend of training in the unit specialty which is infantry tactics and related subjects.

Maj. Zuern pointed out that since members of the unit are available only once a month, it is necessary for the I-I staff to perform many duties for efficient management of the unit. The I-I staff members are assigned by Marine Corps headquarters in Washington, D. C., for a three-year period.

Each I-I staff member, except the hospital corpsman, has a counter-part in the reserve unit with whom he works closely and coordinates during drills to bring him abreast of current procedures. The I-I staff also works closely with the Marine recruits in Appleton in procuring recruits for the regulars or reserves, and also with the officer selection team from Milwaukee which visits college campuses in the area.

To be Self-Supporting

Ladies Benevolent Society Still Hoping to Accomplish Major Goal

OSHKOSH — The Ladies Benevolent Society has accomplished several of its aims during the 100 years of its existence and hopes that one day its present major aim can be accomplished.

As outlined by Mrs. Carlton Foster, treasurer and a board member for more than 30 years, that aim is to become self-supporting. The Ladies Benevolent Society operates a home for aging women and its budget is supplemented by the Oshkosh area United Fund.

The society has had many benefactors in past years and has been named for trust bequests which it will receive upon the deaths of relatives of those persons remembering the society in their wills.

$25,000 Request
One of the latest bequests has been $25,000 left by a California man in memory of his mother, which totaled $10,000 and the sale of the old Mead home given to the Society, sold to the Twentieth Century Association which is still using that building, money which was on hand to begin construction of a new home, the cost of which was to be about $18,000. A public subscription drive was held and other ways were used with the interest used for operation of the residence home for 20, 1902, the new home opened its doors.

Aided by Gift
Largely aided by a gift and been a quest from Sen. Philatus Sawyer, which totaled $10,000 and the sale of the old Mead home given to the Society, sold to the Twentieth Century Association which is still using that building, money which was on hand to begin construction of a new home, the cost of which was to be about $18,000. A public subscription drive was held and other ways were used with the interest used for operation of the residence home for 20, 1902, the new home opened its doors.

Nineteen women reside at the home in addition to five staff members who are the matron, cook, practical nurse and two who retired because of ill health after being matron for more than 25 years.

Not Always Filled
Though now the home is filled to capacity, such has not always been the case. The home is mainly a residence for aging women rather than a quest from Sen. Philatus Sawyer, which totaled $10,000 and the sale of the old Mead home given to the Society, sold to the Twentieth Century Association which is still using that building, money which was on hand to begin construction of a new home, the cost of which was to be about $18,000. A public subscription drive was held and other ways were used with the interest used for operation of the residence home for 20, 1902, the new home opened its doors.

Ohio Company Will Furnish Bookmobile

Oshkosh Library
Board Lets Contract
On $17,962 Bid

OSHKOSH — The Oshkosh Public Library board has awarded the contract for a bookmobile, completely equipped, to the Gerstenlager Co. of Wooster, Ohio, on its bid of $17,962.

Only one other bid was received and that was from the Wertsch Motor Co. of Oshkosh for $4,475 for just the chassis alone.

Leonard Archer, library director, will confer with a representative of the Ohio firm at Chicago Monday while attending the American Library Association convention. The bookmobile is expected in about five to six months.

Cost for the bookmobile is being paid from interest received from the Julia Stanbiller Trust left to the library.

The bookmobile is to have a capacity for 3,000 volumes and will be used to provide service in areas far distant from the main library or its branch facility on the south side. Its use also will replace the present west side branch housed in the Roosevelt School so that the room may be used by the Board of Education.

Reserves Off For Training

Oshkosh Unit Will Arrive at Missouri
Camp Late Today

OSHKOSH — Members of the Third Battalion, 334th Regiment, are enroute to Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., this morning where they will join the rest of the 3,500 man 84th Reserve Division for two-weeks summer training.

About 70 men of the Third Battalion, which is stationed at the Sawyer Steel Armory and is commanded by Lt. Col. Frederick Kohl, left by chartered bus at midnight Saturday.

The unit will participate in training basic recruits at Fort Leonard Wood, Mission of the 84th Division, if activated, would be to train basic recruits in infantry tactics.

This is the second year of a

Mrs. Carlton Foster, treasurer; Mrs. Hugo Eckhart, auditor; and Mrs. F. L. Conroy, first vice president; Mrs. E. J. Arps, second vice president; Miss Ann Rockwell, recording secretary; Mrs. E. R. Dickman, financial secretary; and Mrs. E. J. Arps, board members.

WINNECONNE — Community School District residents will be asked to approve a budget July 22 with a proposed tax decrease of 32 cents per $1,000 equalized valuation.

Proposed as the tax rate for the coming year is $14.38 per $1,000 of equalized valuation in the town. The district's valuation on an equalized basis is $26,819,700, up about $500,000.

District residents also will name two school board members to three-year terms. The terms expiring are those of Joseph Anderson of the Town of Winneconne and Gerald Eisch of Winchester.

Costs Drop Slightly
Anticipated expenditures for the coming year total $685,334. This is down about $5,000 from the $690,818 actual expenditures for the last school year, mostly because of the last year's expenses included furniture and equipment purchases for the new school addition.

The school district ended the last school year with a net balance of $133,545. When the budget was set a year ago, the anticipated balance was $104,000.

Four additional teachers are being added to the staff this year. One will be a guidance director for the high school and the others will be elementary school teachers.

Russell Van Straten, Shiocton, has been named guidance director to take over some of the duties of Miss Edna Palecek who will be grade principal and supervisor in addition to her duties as County Superintendent of Schools. Also to be voted on at the meeting will be a resolution to authorize the school board to dispose of the buildings and the property where applicable of the Mikesville, Allenville, Butte des Morts, Pingry, Mathison and Annex schools.

The district does not own the Mears against Beaver Valley and the Winchester diamond, Zion 3-C against Mikesville at the Omro Junction School and Wee Three against Enterprise at Oshkosh. A prefabricated metal building erected on the site for storage.

Schedule for Today's 4-H Softball Games

Camp in the Woods Brings Nature Into Focus for YMCA Youngsters

OSHKOSH — Mothers who have trouble keeping track of one youngster would marvel at the patience of Richard Bunda, head of Camp Winni-Y-Co, a day camp operated by the Oshkosh YMCA. Bunda and his assistants had 25 energetic eight-year-olds under their wing during the first week of camp.

The children are transported by bus each day to the wooded area eight miles southwest of Oshkosh, new site of the camp this year. They receive instructions in archery, fire-making, BB gun shooting and handicrafts. They go on nature hikes and only stop moving long enough for a noon lunch.

Bunda declared that "They got all excited when they saw two deer near the camp and the first day here they took out after a skunk they wanted to pet." The youthful explorers also found a large piece of petrified wood.

Different age groups will attend the camp during the eight-week sessions. Bunda reported that power mowers and saws and sickles were needed to clear part of the area which is quite a distance from the road.

Although the camp cannot be seen from outside the forest area, the shouts of happy kids are heard along the trail

One of the things that eight-year-old day campers learned this week at Camp Winni-Y-Co, operated by the Oshkosh YMCA, was how to start a fire for a cookout in the woods. Getting the necessary items ready, at right, are Vicky Kortbein and Rick Plummer. The young campers get instructions in archery, BB gun shooting, handicrafts and nature hiking from instructor Joe Schmeltzle, Oshkosh. At left, miniature "Robin Hoods" drawing a bead on the target are Douglas Kortbein, David Barney, and Lance Bunda. The camp is located at a new site this year on County Trunk YY, eight miles southwest of Oshkosh. (Post-Crescent Photos)

Benevolent Society Organized To Serve Civil War Needs

BY JUDY RUSSELL
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

OSHKOSH — The roots of the Ladies Benevolent Society of Oshkosh were planted 100 years ago during the Civil War when a few women met to salvage lint and roll bandages from old sheets and table linen.

This work was enlarged to giving food and clothing to needy families, and the "Red Cross" spirit developed.

The women called themselves the Ladies Aid Society then. They put a notice in the paper for women interested in doing war work. Demands increased, and after the war the group continued in its charitable work.

New names were added to the list of members and on Dec. 5, 1865, the Ladies Aid Society became the Ladies Benevolent Society. One of the early motions passed was that the society should always be designed by its full name.

"Sawdust City"

Meeting were first held in the courthouse, then transferred to the Phoenix Engine House, where donations of old clothing were brought for mending and distribution.

The need for assistance was great. A disastrous fire swept the business district of Oshkosh in 1866, the first of many fires in what was termed "the sawdust city built of inflammable material." The ladies assisted businessmen who worked to repair the damage.

Despite muddy roads, dimly-lit streets, few conveyances, or conveniences, the women visited the poor, carrying baskets of supplies often taken from their own homes. The society had no funds, no endowment, no telephone, no visiting nurse and no automobile.

Of the 10 trees already confirmed as having Dutch elm disease this year, five are south of Oshkosh, four are in Oshkosh and one is west of Neenah. Last year the county had 11 diseased trees of which four were in Oshkosh, six each of the six wards in the city. Donations of wood, coal, drugs and money were made.

The history of the women's work is filled with warm memories. A mother of two boys, who was dying of tuberculosis, gave money to the Society; a poor woman donated 50 cents because the women had helped her during a fire.

Despite a depleted treasury, the Society voted $50 to send a woman to a doctor in Milwaukee to help her regain her eyesight. The women voted to redeem the wedding ring of an elderly woman who had pawned it to buy meat for her family. A sewing school for poor children was started and Christmas baskets were distributed.

City Cooperates

The city overseer of the poor met with the Society in 1888 in the first real cooperation between the city and the group. It was the first step towards a systematic charity organization in Oshkosh.

Proceeds from strawberry festivals, baseball games, charity balls, concerts, dances and winter parties helped defray the cost of maintaining the home and continuing the work.

Dances Rebuked

Dancing parties raised more commotion than the Twist when the Ministerial Association of Oshkosh reprimanded the Society for raising money in this way. The conflict created quite a bit of excitement, but members decided to hold the parties anyway.

The early history of the Society is usually divided into four phases. In the first, work was accomplished by personal contributions of members; in the second, public interest was aroused and businessmen made donations; the third phase was the beginning of public patronage of events, and the fourth, at the turn of the Century, was the establishment of an endowment fund.

In 1907 the Society joined with other charitable organizations to form "Associated Charities", changed to General Welfare Association in 1917. The visiting nurse committee was organized, the roots of the VNA in Oshkosh. Although the Society no longer sponsors all the charitable works it did in the past, it still maintains its home and has 190 active members.

On the board of directors are Mrs. Alfred Kuebler, president, Mrs. F. L. Conroy, first vice president; Mrs. E. J. Arps, second vice president; Miss Ann Rockwell, recording secretary; Mrs. E. R. Dickman, financial secretary; Mrs. Carlton Foster, treasurer and Mrs. Hugo Eckhardt, auditor. Board members are Mrs. Norbert Vette, Mrs. O. R. Jones, Mrs. Dey McCray, Mrs. Lawrence Perkins, Mrs. Lester Barton and Mrs. Henry Kleinschmit.

Quiet Capitulation

There was hardly any notice at all last month when the credentials of the Kadar government in Hungary were accepted by the General Assembly of the United Nations. For six and one-half years the credentials had been spurned. Was there a remarkable change either in Hungary or among the members of the United Nations?

In reality the acceptance was a purely practical move. Refusal to accept the credentials since the repressed Hungarian revolution had meant little if anything. The delegation was seated and voted in the General Assembly. The Russian troops remained in Budapest. The disapproval exhibited by the U.N. in not accepting the credentials did not mean that the Hungarians were shunned in polite society. In fact, fewer and fewer U.N. members voted each year to put the Hungarian question on the agenda.

Earlier this spring United States officials began suggesting that the Kadar regime was really becoming quite humane. There was a political amnesty of sorts and at least some political prisoners were released. It was suggested that things in Budapest were really a lot better than in some other Communist countries accepted in the U.N. The writing between the lines was clear. The United States would no longer oppose the acceptance of the Hungarian credentials and, however small the token easing of pressures in Hungary, it was enough to take the United States and the United Nations off the hook.

In reality the ineffectiveness of the United Nations in insuring world-wide justice became apparent at the time of the Hungarian revolt. The invasion of Egypt the same year could be halted by the U.N. because both the United States and the Soviet Union agreed. But in the case of Hungary only impotent resolutions could be passed and, as the months went by, Hungary became a source of embarrassment to the U.N. Its leaders would rather not be reminded that they could do nothing whatever about the continued Russian repression.

Much of the confusion results from the varied views of what the U.N. is and what it should be. If it is to be a universal body, then the Charter ought to be changed so that the hypocrisy of "peace-loving" is erased. If it is to be made up of free nations, then there is quite a list of members who should lose, not only credentials, but seats and votes. There really was no sense in turning down the Kadar regime while permitting the Soviet Union full membership.

The United States decision not to oppose the Kadar regime any more indicates quite clearly the disillusionment with the United Nations as any sort of effective organization for maintaining either peace or justice, much less the type of liberty which we understand and feel to be essential. The United Nations has become only a debating society in truth and mainly a debating society for the newly independent nations. Perhaps it has value as such. But it is just as well, at this point in history, that little reliance be placed upon it.

The Hungarian Freedom Fighters can attest to that.

Disturbing Implications

There was a disturbing aspect to results of a survey published recently by the Wisconsin Industrial Commission on the number of Negroes employed by the Wisconsin restaurant industry.

The Commission related that it sent a questionnaire to about 1,000 restaurateurs seeking data on employment patterns. Only 85 responded.

The Commission then announced that of a total of over 500 persons employed, 71 are Negro. And then the press release said: "The results, though minimum, would imply that restrictions apply to the employment of Negroes in the industry. Therefore, in view of this inference, . . . the Industrial Commission reports it is considering the securing of additional information by way of public hearing pursuant to issuing a finding and promulgating appropriate recommendations aimed at an expansion of recruitment sources and the eliminating of any discriminatory practices in restaurant employment."

In a subject area as touchy as race relations we are surprised that the Industrial Commission would publish any implications from results of a survey which the Commission itself admits was "minimum."

Actually, 71 Negroes in total employment of 500 represents over 14 per cent. We do not know the percentage of Negroes to the total population of Wisconsin, but it is surely below this figure. Even in Milwaukee it is not a great deal higher.

We would suggest that the Commission does not have accurate information enough to publish any implications at this time. And that public hearings in this matter will be subject to emotional disturbances.

A quiet study done with the cooperation of the Wisconsin Restaurant Association could rather easily ascertain the facts. Even if it wouldn't gain any publicity for the Industrial Commission.

Beeves Take River Cruise

New transportation methods have done away with much of the tonnage upon the nation's rivers. But there may be a revival of river transportation in livestock due to the success of a Texas cattleman's experiment.

Gerald Harrison of Houston raises some of his cattle in Mississippi but sends them to feeder lots in Omaha for the final feeding up process before market. In the past, Harrison has sent the cattle by railroad or truck. The old days of the cattle drives are out of date since the cattle lose so much weight on the trip.

But this year Harrison bought a three decker barge once used in automobile transportation. He converted it to a floating barnyard with cattle stalls, a food conveyor system and watering devices. Then he loaded nine hundred beeves on board for a 10-day, 1200-mile trip.

Integration and Obscenity

New Orleans, like several other major United States cities, has a local ordinance forbidding the sale of obscene literature. There is no clear definition of such literature of course. Even the U. S. Supreme Court has had difficulties along that line.

But at present the ordinance in New Orleans is the center of a dispute within the office of the district attorney.

The assistant district attorney is threatening criminal charges against New Orleans book shops offering for sale James Baldwin's Another Country. The assistant district attorney says the book is "obscene and pornographic." But the district attorney argues that "I think there is no place in this city for censorship."

What has really happened in New Orleans is that the Citizens Council, an organization throughout the south dedicated mostly to keeping the Negro "in his place," has protested the sale of the book. James Baldwin is a leading Negro author with some harsh things to say about discrimination in this country. It is revealing that Another Country or any of Baldwin's works have never had obscenity charges brought concerning them even in blue-nosed Boston.

Contemporary community standards in New Orleans involve the races. To some Southerners integration means obscene.

Black Market in Leopards

American women are being asked not to buy any more leopard skin coats. The National Audubon Society says that a recent craze for the fur has stimulated a booming black market in leopard pelts which threatens to wipe out the animals.

The leopard is protected by law in most African nations, but poaching has gotten so out of hand that the animal is being killed off at a rate 80 per cent greater than its capacity to reproduce, according to the Society.

The renewed popularity of leopard skin has come in the last 10 years, and was further stimulated two years ago when the First Lady bought one.

Two other factors may be more effective than the Society's appeal in persuading American women to help protect the leopard. Fine African leopard skin coats now cost from $5,000 to $10,000. And leopard skin is now being popularly reproduced for everything from nylon nightgowns to $18 raincoats.

Sevareid Says

Englishmen Are Weary of Sex Aspects of Security Scandal

BY ERIC SEVAREID

LONDON — Responsible Englishmen, masters at criticizing their own institutions — and who fiercely resent criticism from foreigners — are getting weary with the sex aspects of the sex- and security crisis.

Daily servings of sex stories have the same effect as daily servings of pink champagne — the stomach rebels.

Security is what interests them now. What they really want to find out is whether the accepted tradition of masterful British supersleuthing, fictionalized and enshrined in a succession of folk-heroes from hawk-eyed Sherlock Holmes to steely-eyed James Bond, 007, is itself a fiction. Editors and politicians who have been crying, "What's going on in this country?" now want to know if the supposed geniuses of M15 know, themselves, what's going on in this country.

Reluctant admission by Macmillan's government that the man who tipped off the escaped British diplomat-traitors, Burg and Maclean, was indeed another British diplomat, Harold Philby, although Macmillan himself once denied it — this has been the last straw. Whether it will break the back of the Conservative regime is uncertain. What is certain is an overwhelming demand for a renovation of the personalities, procedures and — this seems fundamental — the attitudes and values prevailing in British security services. Embattled authorities were pleased to have the television testimony of Mr. Allen Dulles, who said British security was efficient, but this will satisfy almost nobody here.

CATCHING SPIES

NOT ENOUGH

The purpose of counter-intelligence is not just to catch spies, but to prevent their spying. Macmillan claimed the identification of Philby to be a security success, not a failure, to which the furious opposition retorts that the man, like Burgess and Maclean, not only got away with his spying but got a promotion.

If there is a gross slackness in British security, that concerns every government allied with Britain; what remedies shall be applied, and how, concern Britain alone. Her political procedures and traditions are very different from ours and what is appropriate in the context of Washington may not be appropriate or workable in the context of London. Whatever is done, we may be quite sure that nothing resembling a "witch hunt" is going to develop in Britain; guilt by simple accusation, which is essentially what happened to many Americans in the McCarthy period, is not likely to get out of hand. Nor would a British policeman, even one as highly placed as the counterpart of Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, be permitted to act as his agency's press agent, admitting never a failure, or be permitted to indulge in homilies and lectures on the political philosophies of those to the left of center.

All this, Britain will certainly spare herself. But the painful problem of reconciling the interests of the state with the rights of the individual will not go away. Almost certainly British authorities in their security procedures are going to have to move, however cautiously, in the direction of giving less benefit of the doubt to the suspected individual. It will be difficult, almost as difficult as altering the pattern of a physical reflex; so homogeneous and deeply patriotic a people have a hard time crediting the existence of such a thing as treason; people so passionately jealous of their own privacy and personal dignity find it excruciatingly painful to invade the privacy of any one among them.

TOLERANT TO A FAULT

In the realm of security, many Englishmen now concede they have been tolerant to a fault. Item — when Foreign Secretary Harold Macmillan, eight years ago, accepted without question the assurances that Philby was all right, he said to the House of Commons: "We must take care that in protecting our way of life we do not destroy it." Item — when Miss Mandy Rice-Davies, the second little dame in the Profumo affair, had testified, the first angry questions in the House were demands to know by what right the government had prevented her from leaving the country. Item — the private incomes of traitors Burgess and Maclean are still regularly forwarded to them from Britain.

But the moral and intellectual climate in which British security people must work is not exclusively composed of native and ancient traditions. Two other, latter-day influences have played a part. One was made in America — McCarthyism — and the profound revulsion it created in British minds. The other has been the intensive, if not extensive effect of intellectual Marxism, beginning in the universities and extending into some areas of the civil service. A bonafide Communist would be hard to find today in the British government.

Others, from the habitual fellow-traveler, to the kind of person who equates American policies with Russian policies, to the simple, "let's not be beastly to the Russians" fellow, are not so rare. Nor are they rare in some areas of press and broadcasting. Whatever history in the remote future may prove about their attitudes, present history merely proves that the Russians try to use them and sometimes succeed.

Weather Is to Blame For This Column About Nothing of Importance

BY JOHN TORINUS

This is going to turn out to be a column of rather loosely connected thoughts on a number of unimportant matters. Don't ask me why.

Torinus

The real reason is that the column has to be written and no vital subject has come to mind by deadline. But I cannot fix the responsibility for this complete lack of inspiration. The easiest way out is to blame it on the weather. So that becomes the first subject.

Such a continuous stretch of fine weather as we experienced since the first of the month seemed highly unusual to me. I thought there might be something new going on in the air masses above us that would be worth reporting to you.

So I called my friend Herb Bomaleski at the Green Bay Weather Station and he promptly ruined that story. He said the weather would be changing within 24 hours and there would be clouds and rain by Friday night.

Herb did admit though that the nine-day stretch of very similar weather was unusual. It was produced by a high pressure area which parked in this vicinity and didn't move on, giving us a continuous flow of northerly air and producing the wonderfully bright sunny days and cool nights.

Herb, incidentally, is a great gardener. He operates a small farm out in the Town of Ashwaubenon not far from the airport where the weather station is located. His "hired hand" is his 90-year-old father.

And during the course of the conversation he reported that all of his peach trees and most of his mature apricot trees were frozen out last winter. Which may be some consolation to you other orchardists.

The combination of the full moon and the beautiful clear nights must have aroused romantic thoughts among a lot of people. But to one young bud here on the Post-Crescent editorial staff it was strictly a nuisance. He's an outdoor movie fan, and the night of the full moon he was sitting through a triple-feature. He said the bright moonlight made it difficult to see the movie on the screen.

I was thinking that if this weather continued much longer the state should really launch an advertising and promotion campaign guaranteeing visitors perfect summer temperatures.

But then I recalled the method I used to use to bring on thaws in the wintertime back when I was running a ski school. With a foot of snow on the ground all I would have to do was announce in the paper that the ski school would start the next weekend, and bang the winter temperatures would immediately climb into the 40's and 50's.

People who didn't like hard Wisconsin winters used to call me almost every day and urge me to make another ski school announcement.

The last subject is the poor grammar I use in writing editorials. It became the subject of a rather bulky piece of correspondence around the plant here this week. The promotion manager, whose job is the all-over good of the newspaper, noted in a memo to the publisher that I had used the word "irregardless" in an editorial. He declared there was no such word. The publisher added his memo saying that he had noticed this word in editorials quite frequently. There was a strong hint that I should desist.

Another memo noted that the phrase "consensus of opinion" had appeared in the editorial column, and this the promotion manager claimed was redundant.

I quickly conceded a boner on "irregardless," although frankly this was the first time I really knew there wasn't such a word. But we had a bit of a discussion about "consensus of opinion." I think now he is right but I am not admitting it.

In fact I have arrived at a solution of the problem. Over all the years I have been pecking at a typewriter I think I write by the sound of words rather than by any rules of grammar or dictionaries.

I don't need a dictionary because the fellows who run the linotype machines that set the editorials are all master spellers and catch most of my mistakes before they even get into type. And if they don't the loyal gals in the proof room do. I'm too long out of school to start learning grammar so we'll have to stick to the sound method on that. And I still like the sound of irregardless and consensus of opinion.

The boss is right about the editorial columns being as correct grammatically as human beings can make them. But irregardless, it is the consensus of my opinion that all those rules ain't applicable to this column.

City's Industrial Park Growing Up With Weeds

Editor, Post-Crescent:

Each year we see weed notices in your paper reminding the property owners in the city of Appleton to cut their obnoxious weeds. My question is, Who should remind the City of Appleton to cut their weeds? Or don't their thistles, dandelions and milkweed seeds grow after the wind blows them into our neighborhood? Their burdock seeds stick just as tight to my cocker spaniel as any others do.

I'm referring to the city's Industrial Park though I understand the only industry the city fathers have attracted to it is to give the National Guard some free land.

When Rollie Ahlitz and later the canning company farmed the same land we didn't have any weed problem but after the city bought it all they did was cut in sewer and water, cut in a few gravel roads way below land level and let the weeds grow.

If you take a drive through the industrial park don't admire the beautiful blue flowers. They aren't all alfalfa and clover blossoms, those too the pickers are thistles.

Nature Lovers Find Thrills on Crystal River Trip

Tanned Boatsmen Pilot Skiffs Over Exciting Rapids at Chain O' Lakes

Crystal River Trip Thrills Young Boaters

BY DICK McDANIEL
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

CHAIN O'LAKES—Getting close to nature is a treat in itself, but when you combine it with a skiff ride over small rapids and under low bridges, you have all the thrills found in the popular Crystal River trip.

Two of the boat dock owners on the Chain O'Lakes, Ding's Dock and Edmunds' Dock, are making the Crystal River trip available to the public.

While the river has many small hazards, none are insurmountable. They add to a wonderful way of spending a leisurely afternoon. The sun is the only serious hazard for those who are inclined to sunburn.

Proper clothing is essential for all but the young, sun-tanned athletic type, who can spend a day in the outdoors with only a pair of shorts and shirt.

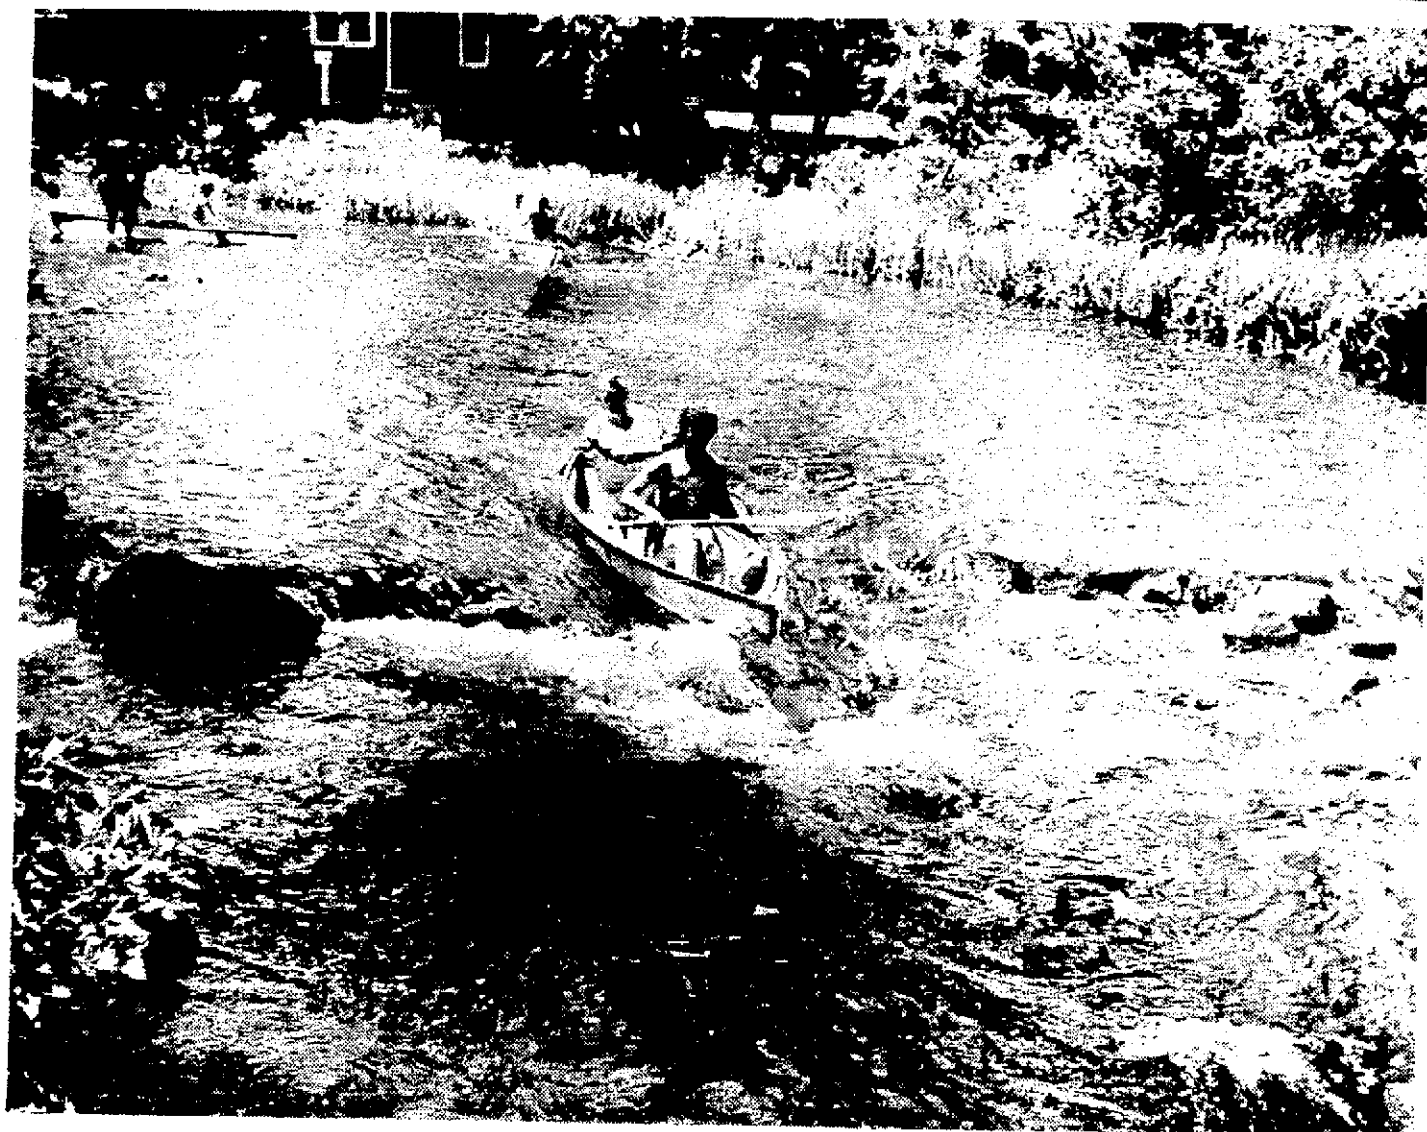

Cameras Useful

Cameras are nice to have along to take pictures of the skiffs shooting the rapids or scenic views of the twisting, clear-water river. Cameras, however, like other equipment slow down the sport of taking the trip purely for pleasure.

Camera-bugs find that they have to portage a number of the areas where their friends are enjoying the spills and thrills. Cameras have long been incompatible with water.

A number of the exciting rapids are accessible by land and, in many instances, members of the families wait along the route for their sons, daughters and friends to pass, opening the field to photography.

A launch from the boat livery provides the transportation to the beginning of the trip in the Lower Chain. The launch also pulls the chain of fiberglass, two-man skiffs, equipped with two paddles and life preservers for the tripsters.

The life preservers are the cushion type and used solely for sitting on in the skiffs. There are only a few places where the water is deep enough to swim along the route, although there is the Parfreyville and Rural dams that provide small lakes.

Pause for Dip

Passing some of the deeper holes, about chest deep on a six-footer, usually finds a number of the younger people bathing in small areas. They too are making the trip but pause long enough for a fresh dip.

The entire trip takes about three hours if the people care to rush it along. Four hours is a more usual time although some stretch it out to five hours.

The rapids at Parfreyville, for an example, is often the scene of re-runs. People shoot the rapids and then carry their light skiffs above it again for another exciting try. Nine out of 10 make it all right, but the tenth boat may take a spill.

Nature provides much. Darting suckers, big chubs and an occasional jumping trout whet the appetites of the anglers while a variety of birds, turtles and plant life provide added color.

Behind the Cover

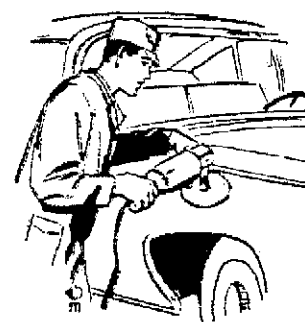

The full beauty of the Crystal River trip is captured by Dick McDaniel, of the Post-Crescent staff, in the photo on the cover of today's VIEW.

The colorful scene was photographed near the picnic grounds at Parfreyville.

While most of the trip winds through the wooded area, there are a few open fields.

The Crystal River trip is a little off the beaten path, but it is a path that should be taken. Nature provided it, man discovered it, and all the people who take it agree it is well worth the effort.

Approaching a larger rapid at Parfreyville causes a few anxious moments, but the rapids are usually crossed without mishap. After shooting the rapids once, many of the younger boaters go back and shoot them again.

The trip originates in the Chain o' Lakes, where cruisers are provided at two commercial docks. The boaters are taken to the headwaters of the Crystal River, and launched in their light skiffs.

A rope suspended from the ceiling of a tunnel under State 22 at Rural provides a lot of excitement for the stouter boaters. An alternate route with a more gradual descent is also available.

Among the sights along the way are occasional fishermen whose lines are retracted before the boaters pass through. The scene is east of Rural, where a little wooden bridge crosses the river.

The Union Spy Who Toasted Jefferson Davis

BY JAY JOSLYN

Post-Crescent Sunday Editor

Because the war came to the South, the annals of Civil War espionage are bright with the romantic figures of femmes fatale espousing the Confederate cause. In effect, all they had to do was wait until the war swallowed up their home towns, bringing with it the opportunity of obtaining the enemies' secrets right in their own parlors.

The loyal women of the Union had the added hazard of getting to the enemies' secrets. Hence almost all of the Federal spies were men.

There was one exception, Major Pauline Cushman. Her place in history, however, was won more for escaping a captured spy's fate than for transmitting important information.

Popular Actress

Pauline Cushman was 30 when history caught up with her. She was and had been a beautiful and popular actress. When the war started she moved from Cleveland, Ohio, to Louisville—as close to the battle lines as possible.

By 1863, she was not only the toast of Union officers and men on furlough or leave but she had created quite a following among the paroled Rebel officers and men who haunted Louisville as well.

Her attraction to the Rebel parolees led to her foray into espionage.

During an after-theater party in the company of some Johnny Rebs, the conversation turned toward the consideration of true bravery. As a jest, the Rebs mission was helped by many unwitting hands. Miss Cushman was on her way to becoming a notable spy except for one important factor.

As she worked in the border states, the Confederacy was turning to underground operations as a policy of war. Led by Thomas H. Hines, the craftiest of all spies, a concerted effort was being made to riddle the North with insurrection, sabotage and covert invasion. Miss Cushman had moved into the fray which one of the main spearheads was being tempered.

The security net into which Miss Cushman fell had been thrown out to detect the preparations of the guerrilla raid-in-force by Gen. John Hunt Morgan. It was the Confederate raiders' plan to sweep into southern Indiana, through Ohio, to join Gen. Robert E. Lee's army moving north through Pennsylvania. Complementing Morgan's ambitious raid was to be a series of Copperhead risings that would serve as beachheads and supply stations for the raiders.

Grandiose Plan

It is likely that Miss Cushman obtained information of this grandiose plan. At any rate, on her way back to the Union lines she was captured while she was spending a night at the farm of a would-be Unionist by the name of Braxton Bragg.

She was turned over to the swashbuckling Morgan, who, true to the traditions of the rebel freebooters, attempted to win the fair lady's heart with blishments and gifts. Miss Cushman would have none of it and Morgan reluctantly turned her over to Gen. Nathan Bedford Forrest. The prototype for American guerrillas threatened and bullied her, but was unable to shake her story and proposed that Pauline demonstrate her bravery by proposing a toast to Jefferson Davis from the stage of Wood's Theater.

She accepted the challenge, but reported the incident to the provost marshal of Louisville and convinced him that such a parade of foolhardy aplomb could provide a convincing cover for a spy excursion.

The theater was filled with excited Rebs, and a wave of nudges and winks swept through the audience as the play progressed to the moment when Miss Cushman was to propose her toast.

True to her word, she raised her glass and cried in a voice that belied her Louisiana birth, "Here's to Jeff Davis and the Southern Confederacy."

The air was rent with shrill Rebel yells and angry Union cries. Without bothering to bring down the curtain, the stage manager dismissed the actress and ordered her to go South where her sympathies would be appreciated.

Martyr's Role

Doffing her theatrical role, Miss Cushman took on the part of a "victim of Northern tyranny" and prepared to leave the town in disgrace. However, she made a detour to the headquarters of the chief of army police at Nashville to be properly briefed before starting on her "road of exile."

The plan was a good one. The grapevine sent word ahead of her and her to allow him a good conscience for killing her and he passed her up to Gen. Braxton Bragg.

Unwittingly Bragg provided Miss Cushman her hope for survival. He told her he was going to try her and hang her as a spy.

"Come, now, general, I don't think I'll be either useful nor ornamental dangling at the end of a rope. Won't you let me choose my method of dying?" Miss Cushman asked.

Bragg barked, "Well, really, I couldn't, as you might choose to die in your bed, in the natural way."

Straightway, Miss Cushman feigned serious illness and was put to bed. She was ill to attend the trial in which she was condemned in absentia. Her illness continued, postponing her day of execution.

Just as Miss Cushman feared her pantomime had run its course and she was trying to devise a new act, Bragg's camp was hastily dismantled and the mass of the retreat took to the hills a few steps in front of the Union's maneuver master Rosencranz.

Garfield, Rosencranz' chief of staff, in consideration of her long service, suffering and danger, in the Union cause, and of two severe wounds, received while engaged in the secret service, conferred on Miss Cushman the rank and title of major, by which she was afterwards commonly known—presumably to the great enhancement of her theatrical career.

Let's EXPLORE Your Mind

ARE FRANK PEOPLE NECESSARILY HONEST PEOPLE?

YES ☐
NO ☐

No. The person who prides himself on always saying what he really thinks, may actually be trying to hurt others. Under the guise of frankness and honesty, he can express his hostilities and feel good, instead of ashamed, about it. Frankness can be important and desirable, but it can also be something else. If you enjoy seeing others squirm, watch out.

WOMEN WANT THEIR HUSBANDS TO HAVE THE "SAY SO" IN THE FAMILY!

FALSE ☐

True. Professor William Kenkel of Iowa State University has found that wives often sit back and wait for their husbands to have the final say over their families. A wife wants a man she can admire, look up to and respect. If he doesn't make the decisions, she may have to in order to keep things going. She usually prefers having her husband express his opinion and have his say.

SHOULD YOU OVERCOME FEELINGS OF INFERIORITY?

YES ☐ NO ☐

No, says one investigator, not unless you wish to cut the incentive to effort. A study of eminent scientists revealed they were high in intelligence, but no more so than many who were undistinguished. The important difference was devotion to their work. This in turn was related to feelings of inferiority. In many instances, it was the desire to overcome inferiority feelings that gave them their initial push.

The People Sing

Children Sing Along With Pete Seeger

BY MARK OLIVA

What's more enjoyable than the sound of happy children. The ringing voice of a child at play, whether chanting "Red Rover, Red Rover, let Johnny come over," or singing "I've Been Working on the Railroad," cannot help but bring a smile to the face of any adult.

Recently, Post-Crescent staff writer Charles House discussed in his column jump-rope verses, counting-out rhymes and game lines, all an integral part of children's folklore. Still another form of youthful expression, and one of the largest, is children's folk songs.

Pete Seeger, termed previously in this column as king of the contemporary minstrels, has released one of the best children's folk music records on the market. "Children's Concert at Town Hall" (Columbia CL 1947, Stereo CS 8747).

Gay Voices

The gay, young voices of children in the audience, singing along with Seeger, are the highlight of the album. The record includes "Erie Canal," "I've Been Working on the Railroad," "Michael Row the Boat," "Hia, Ha, Thisaway," and others.

The most interesting tune is an English adaptation of "Froggy Went A-Courtin'". . .

Here's to chesire,
Here's to cheese.
Here's to the pears,
And the apple trees.
And here's to the lovely strawberries.
Ding, dong, dong go the wedding bells.

All told, the disc provides more fun for children and parents alike than any other album released in recent years.

Another folk-song favorite, Oscar Brand, has issued an outstanding record for youngsters, with the same title as Seeger's, "Children's Concert at Town Hall" (Riverside Wonderland RLP 1438).

Again, the youthful audience joins the stage performer in song and provides very enjoyable listening. The most interesting song, "When I First Come to This Land," tells an immigrant's story of his home life in the New World. . .

Call my son,
Job-Well-Done.
Call my shack,
Break-My-Back.

Both albums are recorded in remarkably high fidelity, but Riverside's disc is marred by excessive surface noise. Stereo adds much-appreciated presence and life to the children's voices on the Columbia recording. The Wonderland disc was not submitted in stereo.

Radio Program

The Sigma 5, the Sharecroppers and P. K. Allen and Virginia Allen, all Lawrence College folk performers, will appear along with Mark Oliva and Marshall Granros on the radio edition of The People Sing at 5:10 p.m. Saturday on WAPL, 1570.

'GREAT MUSIC OF THE ROMANTIC AGE'

In a major renovation of its catalogue Mercury has concentrated on tightening, re-coupling and reissuing many of its better but older (in the sense that classical albums age almost as fast as pops) recordings in a series of interesting combinations. Latest, admittedly a gamble, is a set of six albums of "Great Music of the Romantic Age" which, if successful, will probably be followed by others.

The set offers works of seven representative composers of the 19th Century, all familiar standards considered basic to a good recording library. By Mercury's three big orchestral guns—the Minneapolis, London and Detroit Symphonies under the batons of Aniel Dorati and Paul Paray—all were rated as excellent performances when first issued. New engineering techniques since then have been utilized to improve the re-releases.

One important result is the amount of music per disc. All run at least an hour, with some containing as much as 35 minutes to a side. Careful processing has eliminated nearly all the distortion customarily found on inner grooves when sides run much over 25 minutes.

Since the original releases cover a period of several years, sound is variable but generally of excellent quality. Special jacket notes by Edward Downes tie the series together historically.

WAGNER

Excerpts from Meistersinger, Parsifal, Tristan and Isolde, Götterdämmerung. London Symphony, Aniel Dorati conducting; Detroit Symphony, Paul Paray conducting. Mercury MG 50333 (Stereo SR 90333).

Vivid, whirlwind performances with special brilliance in the brasses. Although the strings are occasionally shrill, sound is otherwise excellent.

SAINT SAENS-CHAUSSON

Symphony No. 3 in C Major, with Marcel Dupré, organist (Saint Saens); Symphony in B-Flat major (Chausson). Detroit Symphony, Paul Paray conducting. Mercury MG 50331 (Stereo SR 90331).

The brooding Chausson work receives a fervent and understanding reading despite wiry string tone. The Saint Saens organ concerto isn't as impressive, possibly because an organ is not a compatible ensemble instrument.

SCHUMANN

Symphony No. 1 in B-Flat Major (Spring), No. 3 in E-Flat Major (Rhenish). Detroit Symphony, Paul Paray conducting. Mercury MG 50330 (Stereo SR 90330).

The Spring Symphony is bright, exuberant and youthful, the Rhenish more relaxed and mellow. Both excellent performances in very good sound.

Slavonic Dances, Opp. 46 and 72 (complete). Minneapolis Symphony, Aniel Dorati conducting. Mercury MG 50335 (Stereo SR 90335).

Sound isn't quite as good here, there being considerable stridency in the inner grooves. Performances, however, are affectionate, alive and frequently very tender.

Stamps

He Opened Japan To Foreign Trade

BY W. R. DOBERSTEIN

Made in Japan.

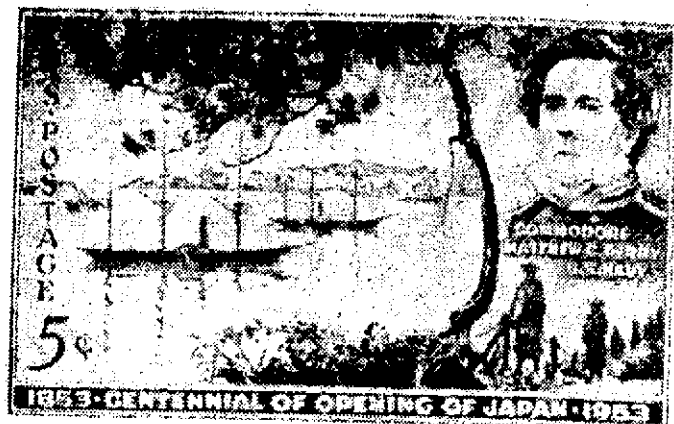

On the American consumer scene these words stamped on a product prompt a variety of responses. In spite of the fact that post World War II production has firmly established Japan in the world market as a competitor to be reckoned with in terms of excellent quality at prices hard to beat—in spite of this, the stigma still remains in many American minds when they see the label, "Made in Japan."

Time was when there were no Japanese goods being merchandised. And the man greatly responsible for changing that is Matthew C. Perry.

Today is the anniversary of his being received at Kurihama Beach, as an American ambassador, by a Japanese Lord to whom Commodore Perry handed a letter from President Millard Fillmore.

The letter requested the establishment of Japanese-American trade relations. The desired results came of it, for Perry was honored on a U.S. stamp in 1953, the "Centennial of the Opening of Japan."

The first day cover of the same year is from the Ryukyu Islands (under American administration although semi-autonomous). The stamps commemorate the centennial of Perry's visit at Naha, Okinawa earlier in 1853 than the date we're talking about—July 14. Some might feel that we should have allowed Japan to remain isolated from the rest of the world; that this might have kept the "dragon" sleeping and not getting conqueror's notions.

Actually, it was only a matter of time before Japan would have awakened to its potential in producing export goods—and the United States got in on the ground floor. Furthermore, there is a great deal of activity in Japan today that the rest of the world can admire.

Japan's progress in social and economic basics goes far beyond her manufacturing endeavors. And this progress has been accomplished in comparatively few years since they were last "snapped out of it."

Commodore Perry's visit may have been a great surprise, an eye-opener. But nothing like the two bombs that blew apart anything that remained of the old Japan—at Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

For Lack of Spokesman, Will Space Program Lose Its Race?

BY JOHN BARBOUR
Associated Press Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — For sale: Ideal location for flag, Prestige neighborhood. Excellent view. Choose from nearly 9½ billion acres, undeveloped. Zoning open for negotiation. Price $20 billion or more — the cost of getting there.

Ever since President Kennedy entered the U. S. bid for the moon, congressmen have had second thoughts about the price, the wisdom of racing the Soviets, the wisdom of trying at all.

The first installment, $500 million, has been paid. Billions more are committed. Now scientists and even spacemen have had second thoughts — not always on the goal, but on the reason.

Opinions

Listen to some of their statements:

Dr. Polykarp Kusch, Nobel prize-winning physicist: There are many great national needs "that far outweigh the needs for space exploration."

A Senate Republican study: Decision "must be made on the basis of over-all benefit to the free world and not on the adolescent desire to beat the Russians in a space race . . . For momentary transcendence over the Soviet Union we have pledged our wealth, national talent, and our honor . . ."

Rep. Chet Holifield (D-Calif.): "One of the things that is holding back the peaceful uses of atomic energy is moon madness."

Astronaut John H. Glenn Jr., first U. S. orbital adventurer: The accent should be one the exploration of space, not just to the moon, but beyond. "We are certainly aware of the 'race' aspects of the lunar mission, but I feel the program is completely worthwhile even if there were no such place as Communist Russia."

President Kennedy, setting the goal of putting an American on the moon by 1970: "If we are to win the battle for men's minds, the dramatic achievements in space . . . should have made clear to us all the impact of this new frontier of human adventure . . . but this is not merely a race. Space is open to us now; and our eagerness to share its meaning is not governed by the efforts of others."

We go into space because whatever mankind must undertake, free men must fully share. . .

Former President Eisenhower, recently: "To spend $40 billion (sic) to be the first to reach the moon is just nuts."

Not everyone, however, feels the cost will be that great. Many incline to a figure nearer $20 billion.

Seek Sense

So the debate goes, behind it all there seems to be a grasping for a good reason, one that makes sense to everybody.

Instead there are a variety of reasons — and in public argument one man's reason may be another man's bromide — or worse, his confusion. Rep. Olin Teague, D-Tex., head of the House Manned Space Flight Committee, blames some of the confusion on scientists, for their inability to speak in terms Congress will understand: "They seem almost intent upon bedazzling Congress and the public with a glamorous and bizarre jargon," he complained. "They talk of diodes and vidicons, command modules and magneto-hydrodynamics, blastoff and burnout — almost as if they were deadly afraid of lapsing into comprehensibility."

Space proponents also seem to have difficulty in offering pragmatic reasons to their congressional critics.

Even Christopher Columbus promised Queen Isabella riches, rather than exploration, conquest rather than dreams.

But even top-flight engineers like the space agency's Christopher Columbus Kraft Jr., can't promise gold and silver, oil or even water from the plateaus of the moon.

More Than Race

It would wrong Congress to say it doesn't want the United States on the moon, first, second or whatever. But in establishing national priorities, congressmen seem to want a better reason than a mere race.

Scientists — at least those who have been critical about the moon race and the space effort — say there is little science involved in it.

But the manned spacecraft center research chief, Max Faget, answers:

"This is a completely new experience. All the science is there. It has always been there. All man has to do is observe it."

There is the feeling that many in Congress expect more.

At the end of Project Mercury, the United States had spent some $500 million so U. S. astronauts could log 54 hours in space. Congress has already granted funds for future projects.

Soviet Log

But over the next door fence comes the word that the Soviets have logged over 380 hours in space, and have 18 months of shooting time before the U. S. manned space effort will resume.

Some space agency engineers are concerned lest the American public lose interest — and Congress may be an indication.

A gap-filling, four-day Mercury mission for this fall was turned down as being too much of a drain from other programs in terms of men and money.

Meanwhile, Congress seems intent on slicing at least $400 million off the space agency's $5.5 billion budget, just when engineers are pleading with space agency bosses for more money.

Said one top source in the House Space Committee: "The space agency can live with this budget. But I won't predict that it won't threaten some delay as they have told us all along. . . . There are too many imponderables. We don't know and I don't think they know what everything is going to cost."

So far the man-in-space program hasn't found its spokesman — the man who can capture the imagination and pit it to the heavens, the man who can speak in those terms with authority to Congress.

In fact, one of the difficulties

Is that the space program is inarticulate. Except for the bright flashes when a man boards a rocket and roars into space, it slips from mind.

Newspapermen have kidded the space agency about reserving one space flight for a poet — so that some sort of verbal rhapsody might come back from space, if not expanding man's knowledge, then at least expanding his spirit.

Certainly the greatest moments in the public mind were the first: When Alan B. Shepard Jr. was a mere man riding a Redstone rocket, the first American into space; when John H. Glenn Jr. boarded Freedom 7 and roared into the first orbital trip atop an Atlas rocket.

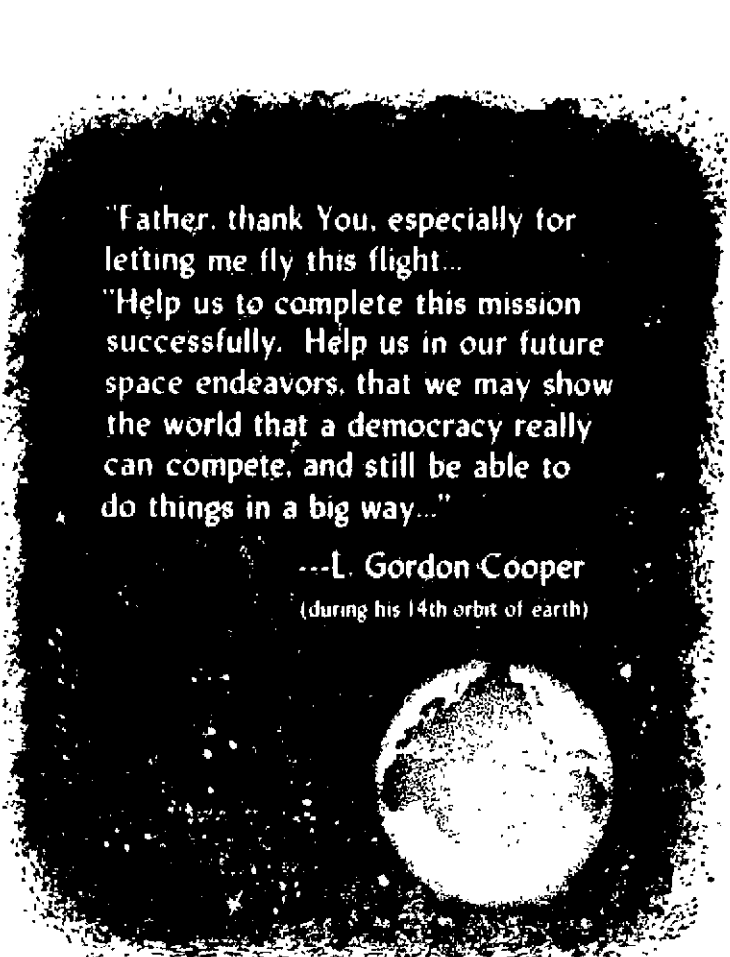

Barometer

What effect the critics of space race and space flight have had on the public mind can only be guessed. Perhaps the best barometer is Congress itself, where reactions have been guarded and careful.

At the Manned Spacecraft Center, the public affairs office gets at least one mail sack jammed full each day. Much of the mail is from youngsters with requests for photographs, autographs and information. There are scores of requests for space officials to make speeches.

The astronauts themselves get some 5,000 letters a month. And after a manned shot, their office and the public affairs office are flooded with mail.

Perhaps this then, rather than Congress, is the best barometer of public opinion.

"Father, thank You, especially for letting me fly this flight...
"Help us to complete this mission successfully. Help us in our future space endeavors, that we may show the world that a democracy really can compete, and still be able to do things in a big way."

(during his 14th orbit of earth)

However the moon race debate goes, the extent and range of the U. S. effort can be decided at four stations:

1. Congress, where the plans are studied and the money set aside.

2. Space agency headquarters in Washington, where officials make the decisions to fly or not to fly.

3. The Manned Spacecraft Center, where the flights are designed and prepared.

4. The final station, something more than 100 miles up, where L. Gordon Cooper Jr., on his 14th pass around the earth said:

"Father, thank you, especially for letting me fly this flight . . .

"Help us to complete this mission successfully. Help us in our future space endeavors, that we may show the world that a democracy really can compete, and still be able to do things in a big way. . . ."

Docile Romania Stretches Muscles as Internal Lift Jars Party Line Barriers

BY JOHN WEYLAND

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Communist Romania, once the most docile of satellites, is quarreling with the Soviet Union.

The recent meetings of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (COMECON), the Communist counterpart to the Common Market, the Romanian delegation has demanded more consideration for its country's national economic development.

This has led to opposition to parts of the Soviet plan for a centrally directed distribution of productive facilities in the of productive cities in the whole of Eastern Europe.

Under Premier Gheorghe Gheorghiu-dej, Romania, a country about the size of West Germany with a population of 18.5 million, has sought to modernize its long neglected economy.

Rich in natural resources but underdeveloped, it has achieved an industrial growth rate of 15.3 per cent annually, the highest in the Communist bloc, during the first three years of its present six-year plan.

But in COMECON the Soviet Union has indicated Romania would do better to give up some of its industrial ambitions and concentrate more on raw material and agriculture. There are serious shortages of these in Eastern Europe.

Fear Position

In Romania, a country with a long, unhappy history of foreign domination, this raised the fear of permanent relegation to a second-rate position.

The Communist leadership, made up mostly of men from Stalin's time, tends to equate industrialization with national strength and is reluctant to de-emphasize it.

Roman Moldovan, first vice president of the Romanian National Planning Committee, denied in an interview with the Associated Press that any basic differences exist between his country and the Soviet Union. But he emphasized that the Romanian government looks upon the economy as essentially a national responsibility.

In March, shortly after a session of the COMECON executive committee in Moscow, a special meeting of the Romanian Communist party was called to consider the situation.

The communique issued after this meeting expressed Romania's loyalty to the principles of COMECON as laid down in the Moscow declaration of 1960. But it added that these should be applied with "consideration for the national sovereignty and independence of the various member nations."

Not Only Words

The well-established Gheorghiu-dej government, untroubled by internal crisis since the downfall of Ana Pauker in 1952, has not hesitated recently to show that this talk of independence is not just so many words.

Not so long ago Romania became the first east bloc country to send an ambassador back to Tirana, although Albania remains on the outs with the Soviet Union.

In the 1963 May Day parade, for the first time, no portraits of Premier Khrushchev were carried, and signs and banners proclaiming friendship with China, Albania and North Vietnam outnumbered those mentioning the Soviet Union.

More significantly perhaps, Romania has started turning to the capitalist countries for the economic assistance that the Communist bloc cannot or will not provide.

"We have great advantages through our trade with other Communist countries, thanks to the common planning in 'COMECON,'" Moldovan said.

But naturally we follow policies in line with the interests of our national economy. When we carry out projects with foreign help, then we accept the most favorable offer, no matter whether it comes from a Communist or capitalist country. The only decisive factors are the terms, quality, modernity — and above all speed of delivery."

West Influence

"In earlier years," Moldovan continued, "we had very little trade with the West, and very big trade with the East. The Communist countries still account for two-thirds of our foreign trade. But the share of the West has increased steadily recently."

"And when we enter into contracts with Western firms for the erection and equipment of industrial projects, in our country then it is only natural that the technicians and other specialists of these firms come here to work."

In the immediate postwar period, after the monarchy was overthrown and Communism took over, only Soviet experts were seen in Romania. Today there are not more than a handful of them, while Western experts—from England, France, West Germany, Italy and Austria number about 500.

A local point for the Romanian-Soviet quarrel is Galati, an industrial city located in north eastern Romania near the mouth of the Danube River. At the Romanian party congress of 1960 the ambitious scheme was approved of building a great steel complex at Galati.

This is to have a production of four million tons annually, more than one and a half times the present total annual production for all of Romania. According to the plan laid down then, the Soviet Union was to provide at least two of the four units called for, but the only work contracted for, to date, a $30 million rolling mill, will be carried out by a French-British combination.

center for the University of Bucharest. The Italians, generally, have had a lot to do with building up the candy industry.

Meat Scarcie

Communist Romania is a country with new, brightly painted apartment buildings in the cities and lines of housewives waiting outside butcher shops for scarce meat.

But in many of its agricultural areas, where two-thirds of the country's people live, conditions match the prewar squalor for which the Balkans were notorious.

Comrade citizens take low-priced vacations at Riviera-like Black Sea resorts, but red and white bunnies stand at all major highway crossings. The policemen inside note down license plate numbers and keep track of the movement of all traffic throughout the country, in the best police-manner.

The Twist is forbidden, but Western movies play to full houses.

These tend to be types that make the West look bad, featuring subjects such as juvenile delinquency and crime.

Dramas by Tennessee Williams and Friedrich Duerrenmatt are staged, but non-Communist Western publications cannot be found at the newsstands.

Low Standard

Bucharest used to be known as "the little Paris of the Balkans," and during the Nazi period was a famous center for prostitutes, but today there are just two decadent and dull night clubs in the city.

Signs throughout the country — like smaller copies of billboards along highways in the United States — tell the people in percentages and graphs that they are producing more oil, more steel, more paper, more trucks, more everything.

Despite this self-advertising, the standard of living remains low, though the consensus is there has been some improvement since the prewar days of ladies' man King Carol, his mistrepreneur Madame Lupescu and the Fascist Iron Guard.

The average family has an income of about $30 a month. At least 70 per cent of this is spent on food. Supplies are limited but generally adequate, at least in the cities, with the exception of fresh meat, which is in chronic short supply.

Motorcycles

Rents are low, running around $5 a month, but the space allotted each person is only 108 square feet.

Skilled workers earn $83.33 to $100 a month.

It is in the cities that the 140,000 TV sets and 2,370,000 radios are concentrated. There motorcycles are much in evidence, having recently come within range of the better-off workers.

Extreme poverty can still be seen in the countryside. Ragged, unshaven peasants live much as their grandfathers did.

Near the Yugoslavian border farmers trudge behind primitive plows pulled by water buffalo, tilling small, rocky patches on hillides, with all land under state control.

At the Codlea collective in central Romania, a showplace for the Communist government, the lot of a farmer is 10 hours of work a day for $2.75. Of this, $1.50 is received in cash and the rest in produce for the family table.

None of the 578 men and women working Codlea's 5,014 acres owns a car, or expects to. Like the city workers, their dreams of this type center on motorcycles, and a few have them. The cheapest model sells for $575.

Unique Jobs Await Gemini Astronauts

Cape Canaveral, Fla. (AP) — Astronauts who fly the two-man Gemini space capsule starting in 1964 will have some unique assignments.

Among them are remaining in orbit for periods up to two weeks, hooking up with another satellite in space, and—trickiest of all—one of the crew actually leaving the capsule to see what things are like outside, more than 100 miles above the earth.

Rep. Vinson Takes Over Record For Tenure as Power in Congress

BY EDMOND LE BRETON

WASHINGTON (AP) — A jaunty, crusty, 79-year-old Democratic congressman from Georgia with bright, blue eyes and a long, sagacious nose, is about to add an imposing official title to his many nicknames.

Rep. Carl Vinson's new distinction: All-time dean of the House of Representatives. On July 16, according to Library of Congress records, Vinson will have been a member longer than anyone else in history.

Specifically in that date, he will pass the record established by his dear friend and ally, the late Speaker Sam Rayburn, whose death in 1961 ended 48 years, eight months continuous service.

Vinson was sworn in as a member of Congress on Nov. 3, 1914.

No other House member comes close, although Sen. Carl Hayden, D-Ariz., still occupies a special sanctum in the seniority-worshipping Congress. Hayden has 51 years of service, but it is divided between House and Senate.

"Admiral" Vinson, otherwise "the Georgia Swamp Fox," "the Backstage Boss of the Pentagon," or more generally "Uncle Carl," has lived long enough to chuckle over the legends in which he figures.

Every newcomer to Capitol Hill is told the story of the taped chandelier — taped into silence after a desperate freshman committee member, repeatedly ignored by Chairman Vinson, tried to force attention by jangling the crystal prisms with a cane.

Vinson's Castle

The flag-draped, old-fashioned Armed Services Committee room, spittoon-equipped — the chairman chews — is Vinson's castle on the Hill. He has headed that powerful committee, and the predecessor Naval Affairs Committee, since 1931, except for two two-year periods when Republicans controlled the House.

In this room Vinson plays to the hilt the role of seniority-blessed chairman, supremely assured against any challenge from the executive branch or his own colleagues. A ribbon-decorated officer is put in his place with a stare over the ever-sliding Vinson glasses, and. "What did you say your name was, admiral?"

A hapless member-witness who remarks ingratiatingly that others have said what he had in mind to say hears the gavel bang in mid-sentence;

"Thank you for being so considerate. Next witness."

Vinson's other role, as one of the little group of strong men who run the scrambling, 435-member House, is not to be seen so casually.

But it's a good bet President Kennedy knows all about it. Since Kennedy took office with a hairbreadth majority of popular votes and an uncomfortably close division in the House, he has had Vinson's help in one key vote after another.

Special Delivery

Over and over, at least until the recent months when civil rights issues came to the fore, Vinson has helped deliver solid support from Georgia and assistance from nearby on the kind of proposals that often send conservative southern Democrats into a coalition with Republicans.

Vinson waves away discussion of his part in this accomplishment.

"They're voting like they should vote. They're Democrats," he said, and as for the coalition—"We hustled that up."

Vinson, a widower, could sit for the composite portrait of the rural, Protestant southern Democrat of the old school. If it seems paradoxical to find him doing shirtsleeves political work in aid of the young city-bred Catholic who is his President and party leader — well, Uncle Carl is made up of many contradictions.

Admirals, generals and defense secretaries pay him almost comical deference. He has dismissed a rumor that he would be named to the defense secretaryship by saying, "I'd rather run the Pentagon from up here."

Yet the military can usually get what they want from the chairman. He will fight for their pay raises, their weapons, their plans. There is a qualification: In disputes between the Defense Department and the separate services, he tends to come down on the service side.

Knows Field

Anyone who would take Vinson's rustic air and spoonbread pronunciations to mean he is an innocent among the experts in uniform could be re-educated at a single committee meeting. The master of River Ridge Plantation, 600 cattle and feed crop acres on Vinson Highway near Milledgeville, Ga., is fully knowledgeable on the industrial marvels of 1963 weapons systems and can converse with anyone in Pentagonese, Georgia-accented.

This most durable of House members was born on a farm a few miles from Milledgeville, Nov. 18, 1883. He went into politics by a purely conventional route — delivering newspapers, jerking soda, studying law, practicing in town, serving as prosecuting attorney and in the legislature — then as a judge briefly before his election to Congress to fill an unexpired term.

Shortly after he was sworn into Congress in 1914, Vinson served as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee and, during World War I, found a friend and fellow thinker in the assistant secretary of the Navy, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

When Roosevelt became President, Vinson was chairman of the committee and advocating a Navy "second to none." The Roosevelt-Vinson entente helped to produce a two-ocean navy before U. S. entry into World War II and to expand it vastly afterward.

Irked HST

The military budget cuts of the early postwar years brought Vinson into dispute with President Harry S. Truman and his secretary of defense, Louis Johnson — who resigned — but Vinson backed Truman when the President asserted his authority to relieve Gen. Douglas MacArthur from command in Japan.

During the years when the executive department under President Dwight D. Eisenhower was Republican and the Congress Democratic, Vinson maintained smooth relations in his sphere. The dispute over service reorganization ended in an accommodation praised both by the President and the chairman.

Then the Democrats recaptured the White House and Vinson was one of the first congressmen-

HERE COMES THE CIRCUS

The glitter and glamour of an old-time circus parade lent color to the July 4 "Day in Old Milwaukee" spectacle.

Twenty-five vintage wagons from the Circus World Museum, Baraboo, carried clowns, animals and other performers through the streets of the state's largest city.

The sponsor of the event, Jos. A. Schlitz Brewing Co., promises to make the circus parade an annual tradition in Milwaukee.

Built in 1903 for Barnum and Bailey Circus, the Asia Tableau wagon was used on that show through 1918. It was ridden in the Milwaukee circus parade by 12 Chinese girls, and drawn by six grey percherons owned by Clark Trent, Oakwood, Ontario. The wagon was also used by Christy Bros. Circus and the Cole Bros. circus. (Post-Crescent Photo)

Lonely Spinster Is Victimized In 'Kind Lady'

What happens when a well-meaning London spinster takes pity on a handsome vagrant who is loitering in front of her house in Montague Square on Christmas Eve?

This is the question that will pique the curiosity of Fox Valley Players as the Attic Theatre presents Edward Chodorov's "Kind Lady" for a seven night run, starting Saturday, July 20.

The community theater's second offering of the current summer season deals with the curious story of a rich and lonely old woman whose house is invaded by a band of cunning crooks, bent on turning her into a captive and seizing her costliest possessions.

Muted Horror

Evelling with an effect of muted horror, made all the more compelling for its being so discreetly developed, the tale marches steadily toward its climax.

"Kind Lady" might be said to dramatize the perils of living alone. It is a play which threatens the peace of mind of any man or woman who lives by himself in a large house, surrounded by riches.

Edward Chodorov, the Hollywood playwright who adapted the play from an original short story by Hugh Walpole, has, in the words of critic Joseph Wood Krutch, "created a sort of psychological nightmare which seems to occur near the border line of sanity."

Veteran Players

When "Kind Lady" opened at Broadway's Booth Theatre in April, 1935, the lead roles of Mary Herries and Henry Abbott (the villain who gains entry disguised as a hungry but suave beggar) were played by Grace George and Henry Daniell.

Area viewers will see Attic Theatre veterans Lila

A lonely spinster's home is invaded by criminals, who take possession of her valuables, in "Kind Lady," the Attic Theatre's second presentation of the summer season. Appearing in the show, which opens Saturday evening at the Lawrence Music-Drama Center, are Mrs. John Peterson, left, Jack Swanson, Mrs. Donald Anderson (in the title role), Daniel Buer, Miss Carol Vander Boogaard and Mrs. John Young. Anderson and Jack Swanson recreate the same parts.

Mrs. Ted Cloak, founder of Attic Theatre, is guest director of "Kind Lady." Phil Dixson is production manager.

21, 23, 24, 25, 27 and 28 in the arena room of the Lawrence College Music-Drama Center.

Shows to follow are "Invitation to a March," "A Far Country" and "The King and I."

'Miss Universe' Speaks in Many Tongues

BY ISOBEL ASKE

MIAMI BEACH—Every normal red-blooded male, and every sharp-eyed female will wish television sets were large-wall-size the night of Saturday, July 20, when CBS TV airs the annual Miss Universe contest, and the most beautiful girl in the world is selected before an audience of some 60-million viewers.

The events leading up to the 90-minute television show, starting at 8 p.m., are, statistically, almost staggering.

The full-time staff of the Miss Universe Beauty Pageant works the year around on various details. Toward the end, 3,000 people are actively engaged in the Pageant and more than 50,000 girls are involved.

This year some 56 nations will send their beauties to Miami Beach, Florida, and approximately 45 American girls will participate in the Miss USA portion of the Pageant.

New entries this year will include Mexico, Aruba, Barbados, British Guiana, Trinidad and Santo Domingo. A Miss Cuba will be selected by the Cuban colony in Greater Miami.

But all the details and work are worth it, at least to the teary-eyed, soon-to-become rich winners.

This year's winner, who will be crowned on television by the current Miss Universe—Norma Beatriz Nolan of Argentina—will receive for openers, a cash price of $7,500 plus a $10,000 personal appearance contract for a year's services.

She gets a lush mink coat, a complete wardrobe and countless other enticements. Not to mention fame and fortune, and the possibility of a rich husband.

The past track record of the girl indicates this. One even married a movie star—Marlene Schmidt of Germany is now Mrs. Ty Hardin of Hollywood. And romantically enough, she met her husband-to-be at the Miss Universe Pageant, where he was one of the judges.

Not only the winner wins, of course. There are consolation prizes. The first runner-up will receive $1,000; second $500, third $400, fourth $300. The 10 remaining semifinalists get $200 each and remaining entrants a minimum of $100.

The Miss United States prize will be $2,500 plus a $5,000 personal appearance contract. First runner-up will get $500, second $300, third $200 and fourth $100. The 10 remaining semifinalists receive $50 each.

On the telecast, the girls will look lovely, calm,

An interview with Norma Nolan, of Argentina, who won last year, is indicative.

Some of her quotes:

"I love the United States and always dreamed of a trip here. I didn't expect to win. All the girls are prettier than I. I was so nervous I chewed through the fingers of my gloves. I am very happy but oh, so tired."

What contributes to the exhaustion of the world's most beautiful girl? A glance at their schedule from last year explains all.

After a few days in Hollywood or New York, depending on from which part of the world they arrived, they went to Miami Beach.

Each morning they were up and ready for registrations or rehearsals at 9.

Fittings, civic events and other planned activities continued throughout the day at a rapid clip. Some mornings they started rehearsals at 8.

If one is a professional beauty, this necessitates a few hours' headstart, fixing makeup and hair to perfection.

In addition to their own selves groomed to perfection, at almost every rehearsal, the girls had to have their "official swimsuits, clogs, identification ribbons, native and state costumes, evening gowns, slippers, sashes and rosettes."

The rules of judging for Miss Universe make one wonder how there can possibly be so many pretty girls throughout the world to qualify. In California alone, as an example, the judges screened 6,000 girls to select 40 finalists, to ultimately name one Miss California.

"The technical problems are tremendous says Paul Levitan, producer of the Pageant." It requires an entire week for the CBS Staff to get ready. The network sends a crew of 45 to Miami Beach, with 20 tons of television equipment including six cameras. We set up a television studio down there that equals any in New York or Hollywood."

Apart from his technical problem, Levitan reports his greatest headache is the language barrier.

"The United Nations has millions of dollars worth of special equipment to overcome this. We don't. I figure that at least 27 languages are spoken."

Communications with the girls who don't speak English are conducted by "plain everyday sign language," Levitan says. "Many of the girls are models or television personalities in their own countries and they have a rough idea of what we mean. But the girls who don't have television at home have problems understanding us."

Still, with the hurried schedule and confusion because of languages, the girls get along just fine.

Says Arthur Knorr, director of Pageant Productions with sanguinity: "Human kindness among the girls is still the thing that most amazes me. In my four years with the contest, we have had hardly a single temper tantrum. The girls go out of their way to be kind to each other."

Come July 20, the most beautiful girls from some 56 nations will be in Miami Beach, Fla., to vie for the diamond and gold crown that will mark one happy contestant as "Miss Universe of 1963." The pageant will be televised over CBS-TV.

Actors 'Too Intelligent Today,' Says French Star

July 14, 1963

Sunday Post-Crescent

15

BY WILLIAM GLOVER

NEW YORK (AP) — After lengthy reflection, Jean Pierre Aumont has reached a rueful verdict about his theatrical colleagues.

"Actors," laments the French star, "are too intelligent today."

Not that they're really responsible for this state of affairs, he adds. They are pawns of technological progress.

"TV and movies have helped dissipate the profession's mystery and glamor, and so the player has had to become a responsible citizen, more and more like everyone else."

With a good-natured sigh, Aumont asserts "I don't think an actor should have to understand too much." He cites ironic proof.

"Some of the greatest reviews I ever got were for my first English-language role which I had learned phonetically and without the vaguest idea of what I was saying."

Plenty of Plaudits

The man from Paris, who has garnered plenty of plaudits through a 30-year career embracing multiple stage parts and over 60 films, casts a wistful eye toward the past.

"Even Bernhardt and those giants—I don't think they were intelligent or had any idea of life around them. All they had was the theater and some kind of genius.

"Now we have had to develop a simpler, nearer-to-life method of acting. We are like a photo; they were in another dimension."

Carrot-topped Aumont, whose facial mobility is a wondrous combination of Danny Kaye and Rudy Vallee, is currently co-starring to considerable spectator delight with Vivien Leigh in the elaborate Broadway musical, "Tovarich." In it they portray a royal Russian pair adjusting to post-Revolution life in Paris.

Aumont tackled the assignment with headlong verve although all the previous singing he had ever done publicly was at a 3-week engagement in Boston. He arrived in New York for rehearsals without a single vocal lesson.

Salutes Harrison

"When you get older, you get more daring," says the 50-year-old star. "I think Rex Harrison opened up a whole field of work for many of us."

Besides Harrison of "My Fair Lady" fame, Aumont ticks off a procession on notable non-singers who have paraded to the White Way's musical stage in recent semesters: Richard Burton, Robert Preston, Maurice Evans, Robert Ryan and Robert Morse.

"I was terrified at first," he admits, "then I discovered that the more relaxed you are, the better you can make the notes."

During rehearsals, it develops, Aumont found time to pursue his second theatrical talent, and completed a play. Five times in the past, his scripts have been produced, several to high boxoffice success.

"I now have two plays waiting to be done. One I would like to change into a musical, about a kind of modern Rip Van Winkle. The other, which I finished recently, is a comedy about a mother-in-law, called 'Madame Ponce.'"

Aumont finds his twin skills as player and playwright mutually beneficial.

"As an actor, you feel instinctively what will play when writing dialogue. And because you are an author yourself, you are more considerate of the problems that the other man must have had."

Just what he will tackle next is a moot matter.

"Directing would be the next career step I would like, but I am an explosive fellow. I do not have the patience."

TV and movies have forced actors to be intelligent instead of mysterious and glamorous, says Jean Pierre Aumont, seen here in a scene from "Tovarich," in which he's making a hit on Broadway. That thinking isn't too hard for the French actor is indicated by his able way with the musical's singing role, almost his first, and his second talent, playwrighting. Five of his plays have been produced, and he finished one during rehearsals for "Tovarich." (AP News-features Photo)

Garden Diary

Question for Serious Gardeners: Is Rotary or Reel Mower Better?

BY UNCLE JACK

Sooner or later the serious gardener and outdoors housekeeper will wonder whether the rotary or the reel mower is best for his lawn-keeping.

For a dozen years I have carried on my own experimental program, alternating between the two methods of lawn cutting, and lately having in my toolhouse a representative model of both types of mower.

My conclusion is that the reel mower is best for the grass, and best for the appearance of the yard, under normal circumstances and given the normal habits of the householder.

But the sales figures tell a story of the increasing popularity of the rotary mowers, probably because they are more adaptable, as in close trimming, and because they give a surface appearance of a closer and more precise and neat cut.

Reliable Rotary

In many instances, the part-time or weekend gardener also finds the rotary more reliable. The reel-type requires more care, more precise adjustment, and more delicate handling.

Sharpening the blades and grinding the cutting bar of the reel mower requires an outside job, usually during a season when the shops are busy and the impatient lawn keeper is not disposed to wait for service. Anybody who can handle a wrench and a bench grinder or a good file can touch up the cutting edges of the rotary.

Yet there tugs at the elbow the awareness that the rotary mower, for all of its adaptability and convenience and simplicity, does not perform quite as well in an esthetic way as does the reel. On my street I can drive along and identify the rotary mower owners by the yellow surface discoloration of the lawns a day or two after mowing. It is the tell-tale sign. It is the sign of the blade that knocks down or chops the grass, rather than cutting it.

Prefers Rotary

I prefer the rotary mower for the reasons given, but I have also adapted myself to its limitations. My primary mower was designed for the substantial area of lawn which it is my fate to mow each weekend. But I have learned that there is a price to pay in regular detachment of the cutting blades for sharpening in the basement workshop. I put the tile to them each time I start the engine. Once a month I remove the blades and sharpen them on the wheel. I have learned also to treat the power of these whirling blades with respect. Don't use a rotary when there are children about. And don't, whatever you do, fool with the blades without disconnecting the ignition.

Ice Cream Refreshers

Sundaes and other ice cream desserts with sparkle can make a summer meal or bring the gaiety and laughter of young people into your home. Here is a collection of simple put-togethers that will place any private "soda fountain" on the map. The sundaes are delicious refreshers between or at meals and the elegant Rainbow Alaska is a beautiful company dessert that no guest will resist.

Rainbow Alaska

1 pint strawberry ice cream
1 pint vanilla ice cream
1½ pints pistachio ice cream
5 egg whites
¼ teaspoon cream of tartar
½ teaspoon vanilla extract
2/3 cup sugar
Flaked coconut

Mix pound cake and bake according to package directions. Bake in two ungreased, eight-inch layer cake pans. Cool. Use only one layer for recipe. Line a deep bowl with aluminum foil, allowing one inch extra to extend over edge of bowl. Spread softened strawberry ice cream in bottom of bowl. Return to freezer until hard. Pack vanilla ice cream on top of strawberry; return to freezer to firm. Top with pistachio ice cream. Cover with foil and press with hands to smooth top. Freeze again until firm.

Place one cake layer on cookie sheet or on wooden cutting board. Take ice cream out of freezer and let stand at room temperature, still covered while preparing meringue.

Combine egg whites with cream of tartar and vanilla extract; beat until soft peaks form. Gradually add sugar, beating until stiff peaks form. Remove foil cover from top of ice cream; invert onto cake layer and peel off foil. Quickly cover both cake and ice cream completely with meringue. Sprinkle with flaked coconut. Bake at once in 500-degree oven for three minutes or until meringue is browned. Serve at once. Recipe makes 10 wedge-shaped servings.

Eskimo Sundae

In a sundae dish put three scoops of peppermint stick ice cream, or other preferred flavor. Pour hot fudge sauce over ice cream. Garnish with sweetened whipped cream. Serve with sandwich type cookies.

Sailing Sundae

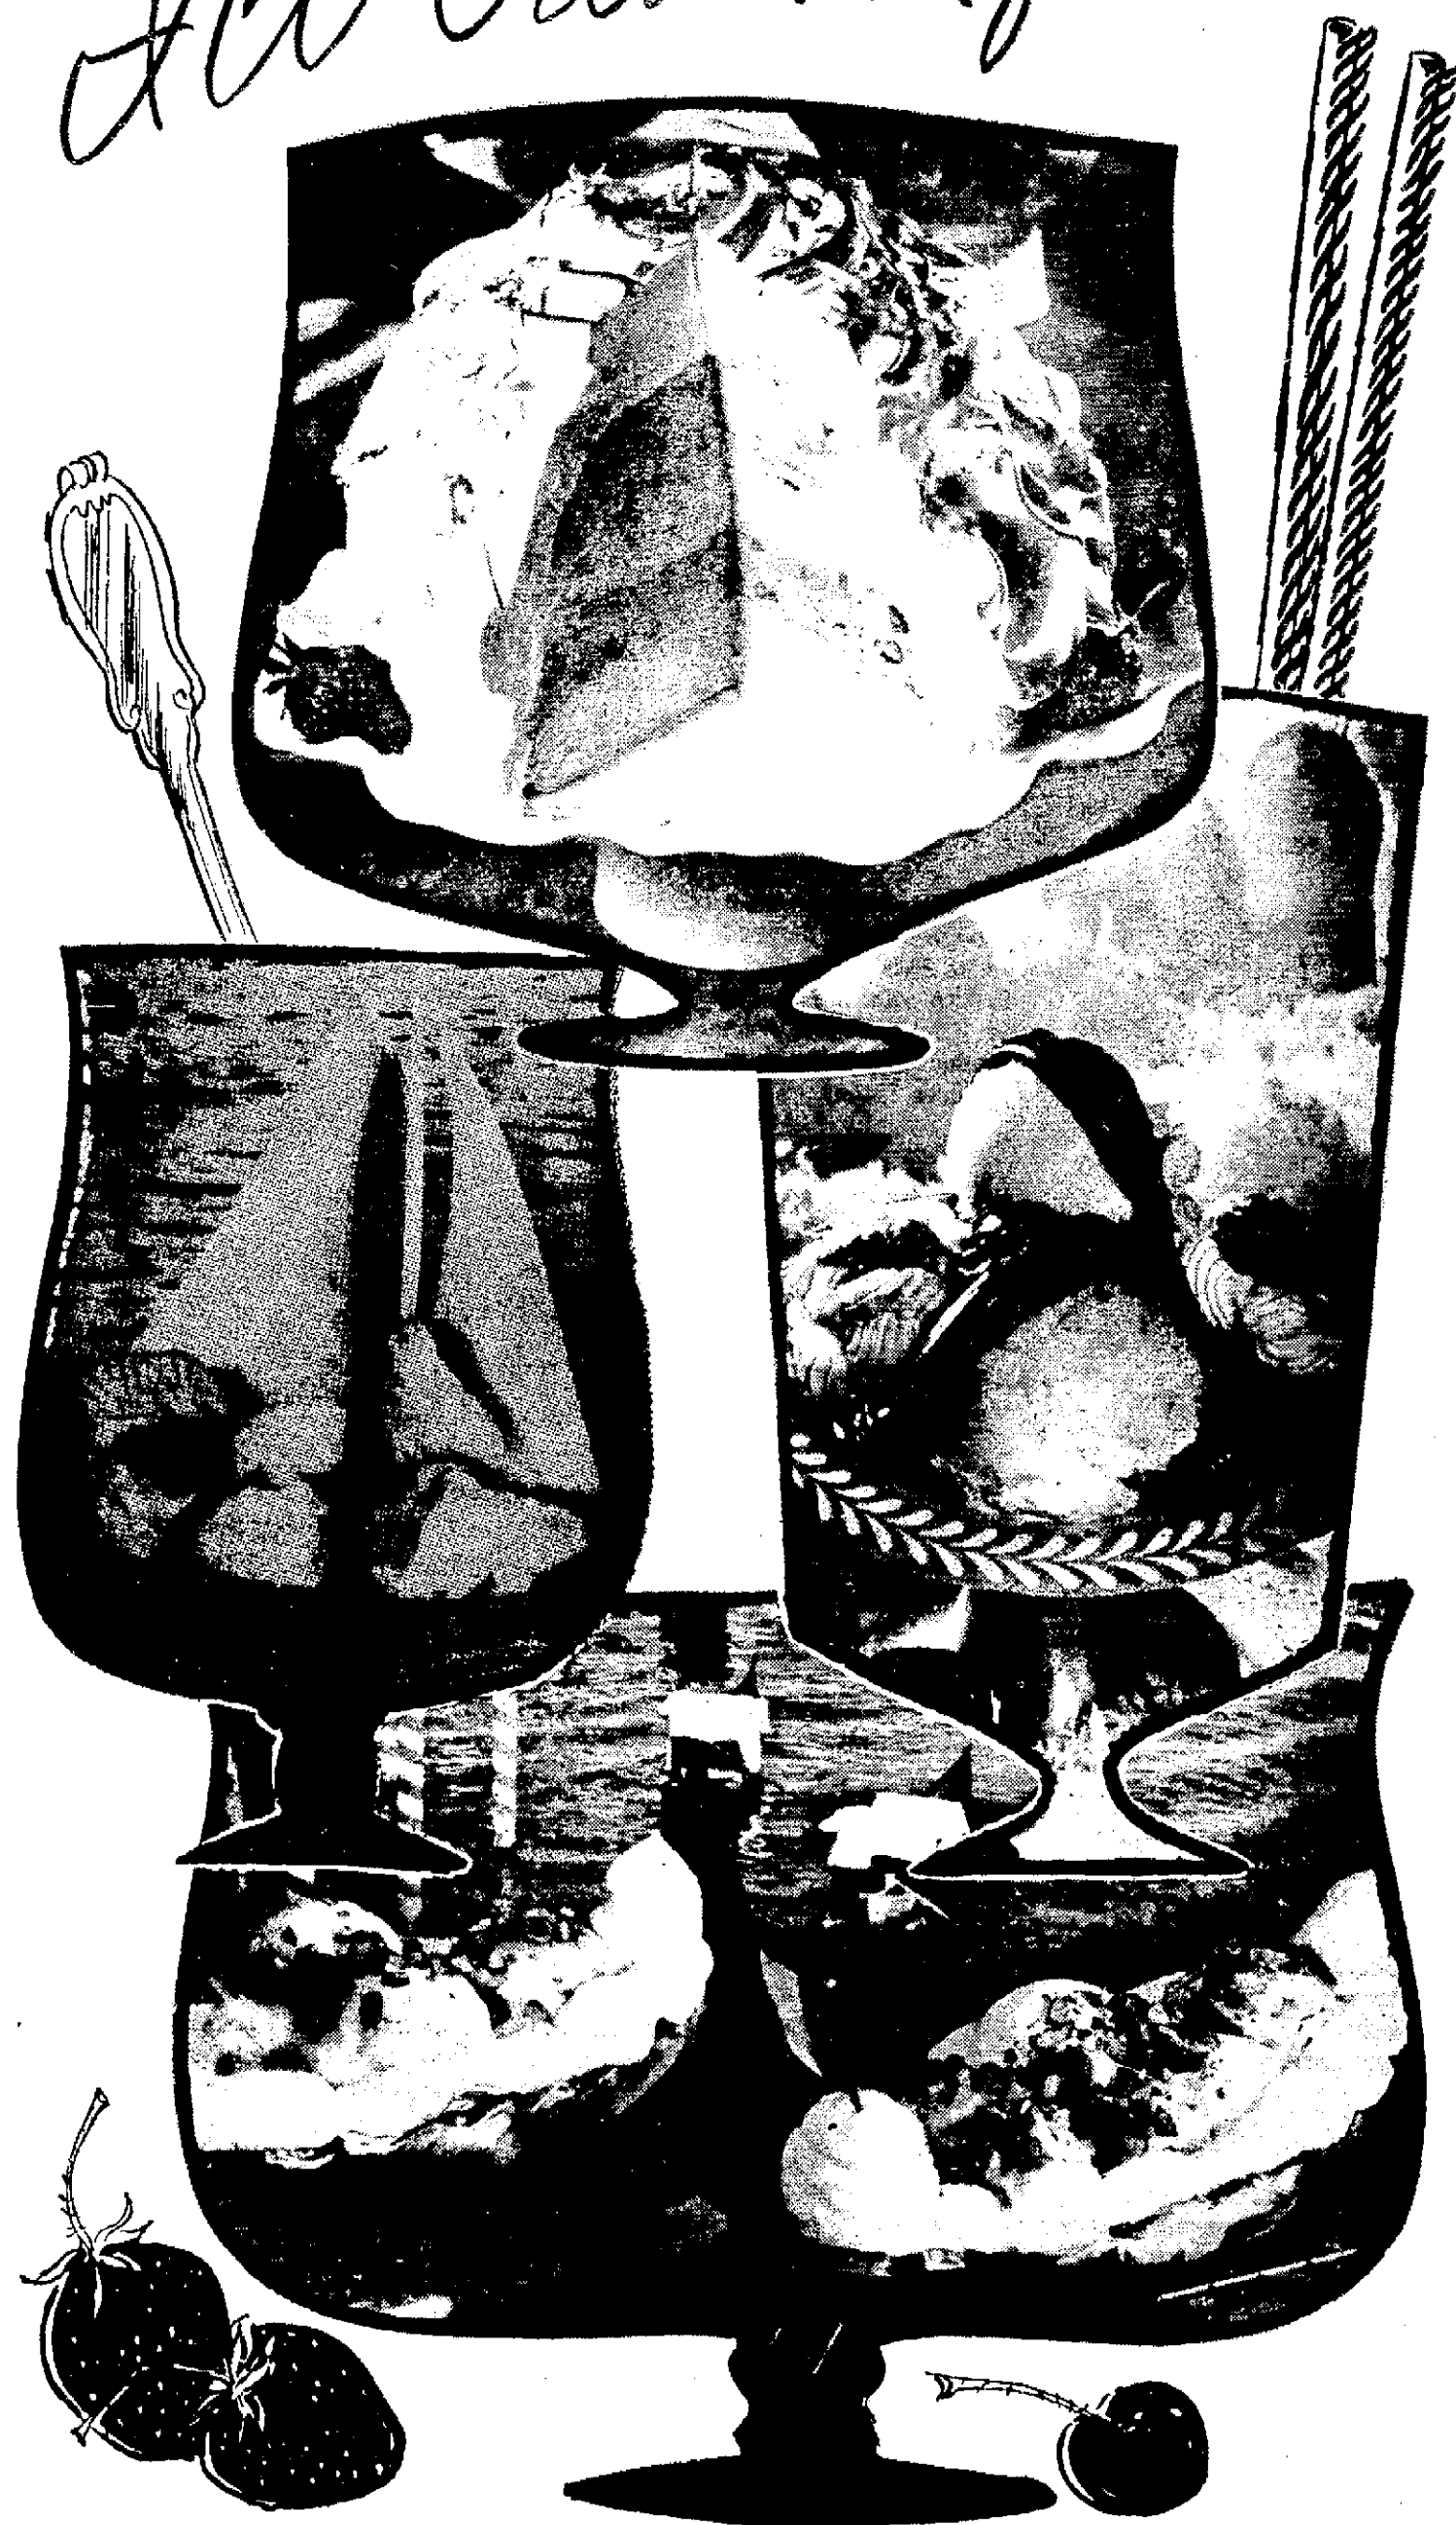

In a small plastic sailboat put three scoops of strawberry ice cream or a variety of other flavors. Top with strawberry topping and animal crackers. Serve with cookie treats.

Neapolitan Sundae

In a banana split dish place three scoops of assorted flavors of ice cream. Top with tutti frutti topping or fruit cocktail and chopped pistachio nuts. Decorate the sides and ends of the dish with whipped cream. For decoration, add a miniature Italian flag made from paper and secured to a cocktail pick. Serve with sugar wafers.

Tropicana Sundae

Put two scoops of ice cream in a sundae dish and top with a third scoop. Use pineapple, orange pineapple or other fruit flavored ice creams. Garnish with pineapple spears, whipped cream and toasted coconut. Serve with shortbread cookies.

How Dry We Were!

How Dry We Were: Prohibition Revisited. By Henry Lee. Prentice-Hall. $4.95.

Here is a story of the thirteen most riotous years in U.S. history—the Era of Prohibition. Veteran newsman Henry Lee captures the excitement and furor of the times in his book dedicated to “all the honest ‘leggers on land, the honest Dry cops, few as they were, and the honest Wet politicians. . . .”

In a fast-moving chronicle, the author follows the course of drinking in the United States. He points out that “the authentic American spirit, our national character, was firmly bottomed on rum and then on whiskey, never on water, milk or fruit punch.”

We are reminded that “the saintly Pilgrims themselves had brought beer, brandy and gin in the Mayflower” and that their successors, moving westward had little medicine for mind or body “other than New England rum, moonshine, hard cider, applejack, rye and bourbon.”

Liquid Background

Having established this liquid background, the author proceeds to outline the history of Prohibition from the year 1808 when 23 citizens of Saratoga County, New York, organized the first temperance society, until the day when the 18th Amendment presumably laid “John Barleycorn” officially to rest on January 16, 1920.

Thus began the greatest era of law-breaking by “good citizens.” Home brew, bathtub gin and basement distilleries began to provide the “bit of cheer,” and bootleggers peddled from door-to-door. Where one saloon had closed, two speakeasies mushroomed.

Elmer Davis reported, “Cassidy may still be in business at the old stand and Father may still go down there of evenings, but since Prohibition mother goes down with him.”

Gangland Rule

In a few years the flow of illicit liquor had turned into a tidal wave. As early as 1924 the Dept. of Commerce calculated that $40,000,000 worth of smuggled liquor was getting into the country. Up from Mexico came laden pack animals, down from Canada roared heavy trucks and long freight trains. Smuggling by sea, rail and motor freight created a transportation boom.

Gangland rule was ushered in as racketeers entered the lucrative business. Gangster runs roared and guns of trigger-happy agents roared almost as loud.

“On a frightening scale, the police in almost every precinct in every city were corrupted because bootleg money, unlike dollars from the prostitution or narcotics rackets, was ‘clean’ graft. . . .”

The clergy could not agree on whether they should obey the national law and some of them publicly stated their objections.

Eventually even some of the staunchest Drys repudiated Prohibition, realizing that the evils far outweighed the benefits. The return of 3.2 beer on April 7, 1933 heralded the beginning of the end, and on December 5 formal ratification of the 21st Amendment by Utah, signed the death knell of the 18th Amendment.

An entertaining as well as disturbing account of an important period in our nation's history, the book is illustrated, with easy-to-read print. It is a fine analysis of the truth beneath the surface and will stir memories in everyone who lived through those unsettled years.

Children Given Nautical View Of U. S. History

The exploration of the seas, ships and the people that sail them, historically and in the present, have become favored subjects for children's books.

“America Sails the Seas,” by J. O. H. Cesgrave II (Houghton Mifflin, $5), provides a nautical view of American history. Illustrated by the author with some 200 pictures—most in full color—and accompanied by an interesting and informative commentary, the book is a fascinating panorama of American ships and sailors. The story begins with the simple canoes and boats made by the Indians, goes on to describe the work boats and pleasure craft, clippers and men-of-war that were noticeably American, and ends with a discussion of atomic-powered vessels.

Marines' Gamble

“Gamble of the Marines,” by Captain Raymond J. Toner, U.S.N. (Albert Whitman, $2.75), is the true story of Lt. John Gamble, the only Marine officer in American history to command a U.S. ship in battle. Set in the time of the War of 1812, the book's emphasis is on the battles and hardships of Gamble and his men rather than the historical perspective of his situation. For boys of 10 and up who like stories of fighting men, it will offer excitement and adventure.

Another in the generally excellent American Heritage Junior Library series is “Clipper Ships and Captains,” with text by Jane D. Lyon ($3.95). The golden era of the beautiful clipper ships—from 1840 to the 1860's—is this book's subject. Included in the well-written text are the personal stories of the men who built the ships and those who sailed them.

“Sea So Big, Ship So Small,” by Jeanne Bendick (Rand McNally, $2.95), is a handbook of good boating rules aimed primarily at making good sailors of young mariners. The author imparts information on how to buy a boat, how to make it go and what to do if it doesn't and the sailor has to be rescued at sea. The pictures by the author are amusing yet make their point.

Off-Beat Wit of Robert Benchley Sparkles in Paperback Release

Delta Books, a new series of quality paperbacks, is off to an auspicious start with its first 12 titles.

The books, measuring roughly five by eight inches, are well bound, clearly printed and graced with arresting cover designs, making them handsome additions to any library shelf. The initial volumes, both originals and reprints, also present tasteful, well-balanced selections for the general reader.

Some of the books of particular interest are: “The Benchley Roundup” ($1.65), a welcome recollection of the odd-ball, off-beat humor of the late Robert Benchley; “Nobody Knows My Name,” by James Baldwin ($1.65), the biting, provocative essays from a brilliant Negro writer; “The Foxglove Saga,” by Auberon Waugh, a fine, funny first novel by the son of Evelyn Waugh.

Others are: “Foma Gordeyev” ($1.95), a Maxim Gorky novel receiving its first American publication here; “A New History of the United States,” by William Miller ($1.95), one of the best one-volume works on the subject, and “Shakespeare's Tragedies of Monarchy: ‘Hamlet,’ ‘Macbeth’ and ‘King Lear’” ($1.85), edited and with introductions by Francis Fergusson.

Rachel Carson, whose “Silent Spring” was one of the important books of this year, also is represented with a paperback reprint of her earlier work “Under the Sea Wind” (Signet, 60 cents). It's a study of ocean life, written in Miss Carson's beautiful prose that makes the most specialized field seem intimate and familiar to the layman.

Desert Country Is Stronghold Of Aristocratic Afghan Hound

BY BUD LARIMER

When the animals went aboard, two by two, canines were represented on the Ark by a pair of Afghans. This traditional legend has firm support throughout the desert country which is and has been the breed's stronghold.

The very earliest of Egyptian papyrus and tomb pictographs speak of and illustrate a "monkey-faced" coursing hound 5,000 to 6,000 years ago hunting throughout the Nile valley. For untold centuries the various desert Shieks guarded the breed's blood lines, and consistently strove for greater and greater speed, beauty and courage. They were always made much of as companions and household members as well. The whelping of a litter was a notable event and the owner much sought after for the gift of a pup.

Rock Carvings

It is very dim and theoretical as to just when and how the breed reached and become so firmly entrenched in Afghanistan that he became known forever after as the Afghan hound. Rock carvings prior to 2200 B.C. depict such a hound very clearly, hunting and coursing. He remained relatively unknown and isolated for many a year, and it is probably largely due to British army officers that he was thrust into relative popularity and spread to India, Iran, Arabia, England and, finally, the United States.

As he became more popular he was able to prove himself talented in a variety of fields. Besides his basic coursing of Gazelle, Hare and Leopard, he also herded sheep and was popular as a Frontier Sentry dog. Then it was but a step to the show ring and a strong bid for a place as fashion's darling. A Best in Show win at Westminster in 1957 gave him assured status in society and soon became popular and sought after in the United States. Here he has been primarily a pet and companion, his grace, beauty and regal bearing being rewards enough to proud owners.

His coat fits him for extremes of heat and cold. He has heavy leg furnishings, fore and aft, long feathered ears, a jaunty head piece and an expression of consummate hauteur. He comes in a variety of intriguing colors, from solid blacks, fauns and reds through various shadings thereof and pleasing varieties. He stands 24 to 28 inches at the shoulders and weighs from 50 to 60 pounds. Owners are united in proclaiming his affectionate ways, ease of handling and his clownish sense of humor. In spite of such a dignified bearing he is eager to unbend for his family, to please and fascinate them by his graceful movements and amusing gambols.

Dr. E. F. Winter of Oshkosh maintains a most imposing pack of these striking hounds. Several are already bench champions and many of the others are well on their way. A bewildering array of colors are there in his runs for your enjoyment, and there is almost always a delightful litter of flubby-footed pups to tickle your risibles. Dr. Winter enthusiastically confirms the many facets of their personalities which make them pleasing companions and stimulating as a hobby.

Willing to be known as Shiek, and providing spacious runs and the acme of rearing and maintenance, Dr. Winter has thus far failed to provide hare, gazelle or leopard for their enhancement.

Ch. Sahodi Shikari, owned by Dr. E. F. Winter of Oshkosh, was rated second Afghan in the nation in 1962 by Phillips System. His wins include the Best in Show of the Afghan Hound Club of California, and Best in Show of the Afghan Hound Club of America as well as group wins in Michigan, Ohio, Virginia and Florida.

'Back to School' For Jane Froman

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP)—Jane Froman, whose voice inspired GIs during World War II, is now a student at the University of Missouri.

But she doesn't sing any more.

"I'm permanently retired from show business," she says. "I don't even sing for community groups." Now a housewife, she spends hours each week studying art at the university. Recently she married Columbia newspaperman Rowdy Smith.

She thinks the 34 years she was in show business passed fast.

Students Smarter

"But don't think it doesn't take some doing to go back to school after more than 30 years," she says. "These students today are smarter than we ever were."

Twenty years ago she almost died in a plane crash off the coast of Lisbon, Portugal. She was with USO show at the time, and suffered severe injuries. She still wears a brace on her leg as a result of the accident.

Miss Froman is busy in state and local groups.

'Preacher Bird' Sings in Sun

BY CLARA HUSSONG

Now that summer is here, you will notice that birds do not sing as often as they did earlier in spring. This is especially true during the hot hours of the day. But through most of July you can still hear good bird concerts during the early morning and the evening hours.

If you're vacationing in a north woods cabin you can do your bird listening from the comfort of a screened-in porch. Driving out to a wooded spot is good too, but don't forget the insect repellent.

In a recent week end spent with Phyllis and Al Holz at their "River's Edge" cabin north of Suring, we passed a pleasant evening on the porch listening to the night sounds of birds and other wildlife. It was one of those hot, humid week ends, and many birds were silent through the day, or sang only fitfully.

Persistent Singer

One persistent singer, however, from morning until night, was the red-eyed vireo. It sang its robin-like phrases of "See me? Do you? Do you see me?" over and over. No wonder its nickname is "preacher bird."

Toward sunset time, when the air became cooler, birds we had heard only briefly through the day began their evening choruses. There were robins, rose-breasted grosbeaks, orioles, towhees, several flycatchers and warblers.

One which had been absolutely silent all day but sang in the evening was the wood thrush. Its cool, harplike tones came to us from across the North Branch of the Oconto River, which flows past the cabin. Next to the hermit thrush, the wood thrush is considered the finest singer in this country.

There are several birds which, through the day, sing only commonplace, or even discordant, call notes, but have a special and much sweeter song for the evening. Among these are the kingbird, pewee and the ovenbird, a warbler.

That evening we heard the twilight (it can be dawn twilight too) song of the pewee first of all. It consisted of a series of sweet, trilling notes, with a few "pewees" thrown in, so that there was no mistaking the bird's identity.

We had heard the kingbird utter its jerky, strident calls off and on all day. That evening it sang its true song, a jingling, rolling series of notes reserved for dawn and twilight time. Most people have never heard the true song of the kingbird.

Duke of Cumberland Taken for a Ride

BY ALFRED SHEINWOLD

"Tell me a story," said my secretary, as she snuggled on my knee.

"Goldilocks and the three bears?" I suggested.

"No, tell me about the famous old hands," she pouted.

Her typewriter was digging into my Adam's apple, so I dumped her on the floor and told her about the Duke of Cumberland hand.

The noble Duke picked up S A K Q J, H A K Q J, D A K, C K J 9 in the game of whist of couple of hundred years ago, with a club turned up as trump. (In whist, the great-granddaddy of contract bridge, the dealer turned up the last card to indicate the trump suit.)

"I'll bet you don't take a trick," offered one of his opponents.

"I've got 20,000 pounds that says I will take a trick," snorted his Grace. And the old boy thought he was getting the best of it.

Needless to say, he was twenty thousand pounds lighter a few minutes later. According to Somerset Maugham, who once made the calculation, this amount of moola would be worth about $600,000 Stateside today. The pound was then worth $5, and money brought about six times as much as it does today.

Wrecked by Distribution

The Duke found an opening lead, and discovered that the hand at his left had nine diamonds and C A Q 10 8. The hand at his right had no diamonds and the rest of the clubs.

Two ruffs established the diamonds. Two finesses in clubs cleared up the trumps. The long diamonds then provided as many tricks as were needed to produce a grand slam.

Don't fret about the Duke, my children. The word is that he had plenty left after he had turned over the twenty grand to his clever opponents.

Just remember the story and the hand. If any clever opponent shows it to you and offers to bet that you won't take a trick, don't risk any of your moola.

Still, if you have $600,000 that's burning a hole in your jeans, don't bet with strangers. Come right out to me, and do your business with an old established firm.

Bidding Affects Play

The bidding tends to locate the missing high cards and therefore influences your line of play. A simple example:

West leads the jack of hearts, holding the trick. He continues with a low heart to dummy's ace.

Declarer knocks out the ace of diamonds, and West returns a heart to South's king. Now South can take four diamonds, two hearts, and one spade without giving up the lead.

How is he to get the two additional tricks that he needs?

The bidding makes it clear that it would be fatal to lead clubs. West would not open the bidding in a four-card suit headed by the jack. Moreover, West must have the ace of clubs. Hence a club lead would allow West to take the rest of the hearts, and the defenders will get, in all, three hearts and two side aces.

Must Risk Finesse

Instead, South must risk the spade finesse. If West has K-x of spades, South can get three spade tricks instead of only one.

The king is pretty well marked in the West hand by the opening bid, so the only real question is whether West has more than one small spade to guard the king.

South leads a low spade to win a finesse with dummy's jack, then continues with the ace of spades. The king drops, and South makes his contract.

Now forget about the actual bidding and suppose that West had passed to begin with. North might open with one diamond, and South might respond with one notrump. North would raise to three notrumps, ending the auction.

The early play would go as before. South would refuse one heart, take the next, knock out the ace of diamonds, and win a heart return.

But now the correct play would change. It would be foolish to stake the contract on finding K-x of spades in the West hand. South would try to develop two club tricks.

This plan would work if East had the ace of clubs or if the hearts were 4-4 rather than 5-3. The combination is far more likely than finding the king of spades guarded only once in the West hand.

Bill Mauldin Recounts Harrowing Experiences on JFK's European Trip

BY BILL MAULDIN

When JFK took his jet-propelled tour of Europe a couple of weeks ago, I went along in a chartered Pan-American 707, with a hundred or so other members of the press.

Most are on regular assignment to Washington and the White House, and are the ones you see asking the President questions on TV press conferences. They are veterans of these trips, most of them having roamed the world with Kennedy and Eisenhower, many with Truman, and some with Roosevelt.

I thought I was a pretty seasoned traveler, myself, with my dog-eared suitcase and my rare collection of drip-dry shirts, but I came back humble and exhausted, feeling something like a character from an Oz book who had ridden a cyclone to the Land of the Munchkins. The only way I can recount the 13-day journey without writing a book is to present my notes, more or less as I scribbled them along the way.

FRIDAY: Reported at Andrews Air Force Base, Washington, for non-stop flight to Dublin, Ireland. Our 707 parked next to JFK's two 707s. Was told Presidents traveling abroad these days take spare jet in case first one develops hiccup. I did it, too, so no partisan nonsense about economy from GOP press.

With the sun barely up, was handed a glass of spiked tomato juice upon boarding by one of half-dozen lovely Pan-Am stewardesses. Was told girls regard this choice assignment. No diapers. Six hours to Dublin, plus six-hour time difference. Checked into Gresham Hotel, where Irish International Airlines gave a press party. Was handed glass of spiked orange juice by one of their hostesses, who then confided that she belonged to a militant anti-drinking-and-smoking society and would rather cope with infants aloft than to be doing this.

SATURDAY: Early morning buses fanned out from Gresham in all directions over Irish countryside, loaded with newsmen seeking nostalgic background material for JFK visit next week. (President himself leaving Washington tonight, with Bonn, Germany, first stop.) As day wore on, roads got narrower, springs stiffer, engines hotter, tempers shorter. Rest and refreshment facilities sparse, communication with populace not wholly rewarding. Reporter made unnecessary crack about quality of local highways; bus driver responded with observation that it took St. Patrick to run the snakes out of Eire and Kennedy to bring them back. Late in afternoon, buses straggled in, one by one, to ramp of 707, where stewardesses waited with soothing medicines and radiant smiles. Two-hour flight to Bonn, typewriters clacking here and there throughout plane, as background material on Emerald Isle took form.

SUNDAY: Press arrived at Bonn-Cologne airport hour earlier than JFK's scheduled 9:30 landing. Route lined with German soldiers. Roadside bushes patrolled by German cops with German shepherd dogs. Honor guard of German troops already drawn up stiffly at attention. Chancellor Konrad Adenauer and German brass arrived about 9:30 in fleet of Mercedes, escorted by large flocks of white-garbed motorcyclists with musical exhaust pipes. Spooky, muted sound.

President's plane (called A Force One) landed eight minutes early. Pilot knocked this off by taxiing up very slowly, so that bands blared and cannon roared 21-gun salute on schedule. Artillery looked and sounded like 88s. Speeches, motorcade to Cologne. Makeup of motorcade standard throughout trip: first motorcycles, then camera truck, open presidential car, bodyguard car, half-dozen carloads of high dignitaries, VIP bus containing JFK's party, several press buses, then long, long line of lesser luminaries' cars trailing over horizon.

Everybody quickly caught on that to ride behind the press was equivalent to sitting below the salt. Half the fun of these rides throughout Europe was watching generals and ministers trying to sneak around us at wide points in streets, while our drivers skillfully closed ranks bumper to bumper to freeze them out.

German word for City Hall is rathaus. Their idea, not mine. Every rathaus has a golden book for distinguished autographs. President Kennedy went to Cologne's rathaus at 10:55, emerged at 11:25 to greet crowds of Germany's oldest city, of which he claimed to be native. Reporter asked Pierre Salinger, standing near press group, if JFK was really from St. Augustine, Fla. Salinger said spell it Boston.

JFK and hests attended mass in Cologne's cathedral. Huge crowds outside, badly handled by local police, who knocked women and children about freely and cringed before any adult males who looked waintly official. Situation got so wild for a while that people inside church couldn't get out. During afternoon chiefs of state made big medicine behind closed doors, while we milled around press center in government building. Two main questions of day: "What's this trip all about?" and "What does de Gaulle think of it?" Never did learn answers.

MONDAY: Quiet day, with more private talks among leaders. Opportunity for press to wash out socks and write reflective-type prose while they dried. I drew two cartoons, neither remotely connected with trip.

TUESDAY: Busy day. Press boarded 8:30 a.m. train for scenic ride along Rhine to U. S. Army base at Hanau. Reviewed 15,000 troops with rockets, tanks, muskets. Entire area raked and manicured for JFK's benefit, but somebody forgot to sweep ramp so Presidential helicopter arrival blew dust all over honor guard. Not a dry eye in bunch.

At 10:30 a.m. JFK addressed troops. I quote one line: "Stretching all around the globe there are Americans on duty who help maintain the freedom of dozens of countries who may now be engulfed if it were not for this long, thin line which occupies such a position of responsibility guarding so many gates where the enemy campfires in some cases can be seen from the top of the wall." Took troops' minds off aching feet.

President lunched at enlisted men's mess. Number of officers decided to do likewise. Press center set up in helicopter hangar. All hands banged out stories, got them on wires, then trudged half-mile across base for quick bite. Halfway through bite, press advised run get gear and luggage from hangar, because buses will pick them up here. Fifteen minutes later, plans reversed again. This was army, all right.

2:15 p.m. — Motorcade to Frankfurt. Large, friendly crowds along way. Stop at rathaus. President went inside to sign golden book. Took 40 minutes this time. Tremendous press of people outside. Women jammed against barricades began fainting like flies. JFK emerged, made speech, then walked hundred yards or so between police lines to historic church, for major policy speech. Crowd now several hundred thousand, surged against barricades for glimpse of visitor, squashing more people and frightening many members of press, including this one, out of wits.

Some desperate souls took refuge by going inside church for speech. I climbed up side of war memorial (didn't notice what war) and watched medics cart off casualties. Crowd roared with laughter at sight of plump old lady unconscious on stretcher with large, flowered handbag balanced, quivering, on her protruding abdomen. Great sense of humor.

5:30 p.m. — After speech press battled way through mob to rathaus basement communications center, quickly wrote stories about major policy speech, got them on wires, then fought way to buses, which shot off through crowd like juggernauts, headed for Wiesbaden. JFK beat up by helicopter, so am unable to report any hanky-panky with rathaus and golden book in this city.

WEDNESDAY: Buses to Wiesbaden airport, where out 707 waited with ministering angels. Land- ed before President in Berlin at Tegel Airport, only jet-size strip in city, which happens to be in French zone. JFK was giving de Gaulle had time on this trip, so we found our Gallic hosts awaiting Air Force One with four hutzners, exactly 21 rounds of ammunition, an honor guard, and not much enthusiasm. JFK landed, the motorcade formed, and we were off.

Something like 2,000,000 cheering West Berliners along way. Happy crowd, with grinning cops. Can't say it's good, I can't say it's bad. It's very difficult to live — not like Rhineland police. To here for a year without my family.

At the end of his stay, how- ever, he did say he liked living up propaganda signs at last minute. However, his 9-month stay ute so they'd be in pictures, too. Clever devils. Same thing at Checkpoint Charlie.

Now to Berlin rathaus. After it is unlikely the talks and argu- business with golden book. JFK ments made any change in the faced great throng (1,000 first-aid cases, from crushing) and made now-famous "I am a Berliner" speech. "Hell, I thought he said he was from St. Augustine." I heard reporter remark in rathaus basement press room, where everybody banking out stories while watching speech on closed circuit TV to keep from getting stomped to death outside.

Motorcade to Free University. Major speech. Press wrote about this one on typewriters in laps as press buses roared across Berlin with motorcycle escort to airport. We had to beat JFK to Dublin. We did.

Atmosphere more tranquil in Ireland. At airport found Eamon De Valera and welcoming party. Rehearsing on strip of carpet to ramp. Some 300 sturdy troops lined up, with artillery. When dling reporters. Vigil finally re- Aid Force One arrived, I lost count of rounds fired in salute, but could have sworn they kept gaily on until they ran out of ammunition. De Valera made very touching speech. President, responded, and we were off in motorcade to Dublin. Fine broth of a crowd. Back to Gresham hotel, Irish Airlines having party. Press cleaned up last of Berlin stories, wrote new ones about Dublin, and stumbled off to bed. Long day.

THURSDAY, * FRIDAY and SATURDAY: Kennedy covered Ireland like the dew, flitting hither and yon by chopper, while press chased him by bus. Unfair contest. "How can he stand the pressure?" a local lady asked about JFK. "Mad- am, he's got somebody else doing his laundry," she was told.

SUNDAY: JFK conferred with Macmillan near Brighton, Eng- land. Considerable interest by London press, and every man who could be spared from Pro- fumo case dispatched to Brighton. Burning question of day: when Kennedy arrived 45 minutes late for Macmillan's airport reception, had Mac known JFK would be tardy, or had he been kept cool- ing his heels? With issue unre- solved, we boarded buses for Gal- wick Airport and 707 for Rome. Much thoughtful prose typed en route.

MONDAY: Rome paid little attention to JFK. Even messed up Presidential motorcade, cut- ting in and out to pass with lit- tle cars and sputtering scooters. Nothing personal: just Romans getting home after weekend in country. Besides, they'd just crowned a Pope, and had had enough pomp and ceremony for the week.

TUESDAY: Two hundred mem- bers of local and foreign press herded to Vatican early in morn- ing, kept in Clementine Room with closed windows for several hours under menacing glares of De Valera and welcoming party. Swiss guards with halberds. Pi- erre Salinger seen taking approx- imate notes on this method of hand- drawn up, with artillery. When dling reporters. Vigil finally re- warded by eight-second glimpse of JFK crossing room en route to audience with Pope. Another perspiring hour, then His Holiness made an appearance at opposite end of room from where press expected him. Frantic scramble in his direction, with TV cameras toppling and lights falling. Pope radiated good-humored serenity, made quiet little one-minute speech which ended before hub- bub died, blessed crowd, exited. Back to hotel to get off stories about historic meeting, then press plane to Naples, where President scheduled to make major speech at NATO base.

Naples more than made up for Rome's apathy. Hard to tell if they loved JFK for himself or just felt like having a ball, but he got roaring welcome entering city and tumultuous farewell on way out. President Kennedy and Pres- ident Segni went through formal good-by ceremonies at airport and blasted off for home, our man in his Boeing and Segni in his Con- vair. Press facilities provided in airport lobby for sending off stories about all this. Then we were off into setting sun, too.

Midnight fuel stop at Shannon. Press advised that duty-free liq- uor store open for business. Clerks inside, having heard hun- dred American newspapermen aboard jet, rubbed hands in an- ticipation. Amazing number of us slept right through opportunity. (Copyright, 1963)

Russian Exchange Student at UW Sees New War Creating Red World

Madison Stay by Leningrad Teacher Fails To Shake Party Line View of America

BY LAURENCE WEBER

If another World War comes, the whole world will be socialist. Travel was much in his mind when it is over is the political philosophy of Vladimir Slabikov, a Russian exchange student at the University of Wisconsin in Madison last term. "Look at history," he argued. "In 1917 there was only one so-called socialist country — Russia. After desk which was cluttered with the Second World War there were texts and technical journals many more. After a Third World — some containing articles which War, the whole world will be so- he had written. On a corner of the desk was a small Japanese transistor radio and hanging next wall was a mirror with an engraved Slabikov said he hoped for peace print of Lenin.

Slabikov, an instructor at Leningrad Polytechnic Institute, cup of coffee or slices of bread spent nine months at Madison with which he made sandwiches studying the theory of American when he shared the hospitality of hydro-electric plants and power his room with a visitor.

Argued Freedom
The 35-year-old Russian tried to point out to his college friends that America is not as free as they claimed. He used college fraternities as an example of his point. "Fraternities don't let everyone join them. If this is a free country, shouldn't anyone be able to join a fraternity?"

He cited current events in his argument also. "During the Second World War, Russia and America fought Fascism together. Today in your country the Communist party has to go underground, but you let Fascists like the Birch Society go free. Why is this? Is this freedom?"

Money God
Slabikov wanted to know why some people in America are very poor and some very rich. "In Russia," he would say, "no one is rich. What good is money? It is evil. In America, money is god. Here with money I am a living. He chose a dormitory and man; without money I am an in- available to him in Russia, he legian—wearing a blue "Bucky Badger" nylon jacket and tortoise shell glasses — and frequenting department refused to allow him to go to a convention in the centers. He declared that students Southwest last spring and restrict- ing Soviet Russia have more of ed his travel to New York, Wash- ington and Madison, preventing dents who he declared were too him from getting to know the individualistic.

American people and customs the way he said he wanted to. Travel was much in his mind. The dull, gray walls of his room were brightened by maps of the United States and he demon- strated a greater map knowledge of the country than most natives.

A Russian-English dictionary was kept handy on his desk which was cluttered with the texts and technical journals many more. After a Third World — some containing articles which War, the whole world will be so- he had written. On a corner of the desk was a small Japanese transistor radio and hanging next wall was a mirror with an engraved Slabikov said he hoped for peace print of Lenin.

For Slabikov, Communism is a religion. He said, "My god is man. I believe only in people. Only people can make a society. God is a product of the mind of man. Few people in our country believe in God, but look how strong we are."

He said an old aunt of his is one of the few Christians left in Russia and that he had sent her a card for Easter. "It's their business," he shrugged.

No Change
Early in his stay at Madison, Slabikov said he could not give an opinion about America. "I'm West Berliners along way. Can't say it's good, I can't say it's bad. It's very difficult to live — not like Rhineland police. To here for a year without my family."

Compton's puts him there!

After six orbits, Astronaut Walter Schirra brings his capsule back on target; and your boy or girl is right there with him—part of that memorable event—reading about it in Compton's Pictured Encyclopedia.

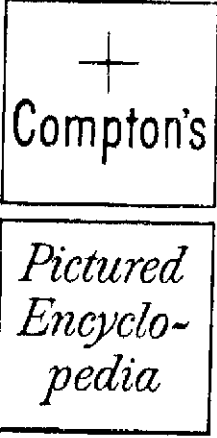

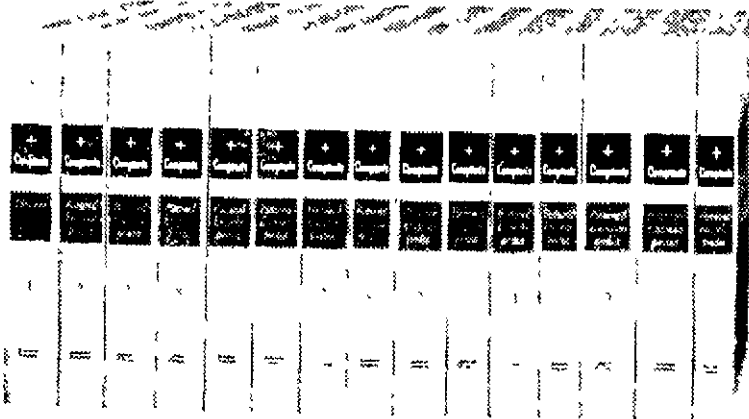

Only Compton's makes learning such a living thing. On all its pages, Compton's comes alive. It's the encyclopedia that—more than any other—stimulates, intrigues, inspires young minds. For Compton's is written in a way that captures the imagination. It's packed with exciting pictures that translate then-and-there to here-and-now.

Facts are easier to find in Compton's, too. The unique Fact-Index—in the back of every volume—leads even the youngest reader right to what he's after, and to all related information in all volumes. He finds it—and finds it fascinating. Facts are linked to his earlier knowledge and experience; subjects are written at the reading level of the grades in which they are usually studied. That's the Compton tradition. And that's why Compton's, unlike other encyclopedias, is seldom left on the shelf.

As a constant companion and guide, Compton's puts him there in the great adventure of learning. Chances are he'll get on from there, too. Give him that chance—with Compton's.

Now Compton's announces an expanded educational program for all the family

COMPTON'S TEMAC FOR THE HOME
TEMAC brings programmed learning into your home. A wide variety of TEMAC courses—from mathematics to music—is available for independent study with Compton's new "teaching machine." Courses are "programmed" in simple, sequential steps, letting the student progress at his own speed.

COMPTON'S ILLUSTRATED SCIENCE DICTIONARY
This unique, authoritative volume clarifies the exacting language of today's science for the science student and general reader. More than 4000 terms from 14 major sciences are defined, correlated with their field, and quoted in context. Nearly 1,500 illustrations, charts, and diagrams enrich understanding.

partial" handling of the tense situation, but accused Gov. Tawes of "inaction and lack of positive leadership."

"We strongly urge," the statement said, "that he call a special session of the General Assembly or issue an executive order to ban racial discrimination in places of public accommodation or come himself to Cambridge to re-establish negotiations."

Legislative Session

Tawes has turned down demands for a special legislative session. He said legislative leaders have advised him that the present public accommodations law, limited in scope, might be broadened instead of broadened if the lawmakers were convened now.

Under the watchful eyes of the 400 guardsmen, the city displayed an uneasy semblance of normalcy today. There was no immediate sign of a further outbreak of racial violence, such as left six white persons wounded this week. People shopped as usual. But traffic movements were heavily restricted. Acting under modified martial law. Guardsmen would permit no white persons to enter the Negro section, with its 4,000 population, unless they could show they had urgent reasons warranting a special pass.

Active Role

From sources close to Gov. J. Millard Tawes, meanwhile, came indications that the governor would take a more active role in seeking some kind of settlement of the racial dispute.

The tension—and the violence—arise from a drive by Negroes, and their white sympathizers, to break down racial barriers at lunchrooms and other places of accommodation, to obtain full integration of schools and to get better jobs and housing.

families of the three steadfastly believed they were in there.

Damp Gas

The search had to be suspended several times because of the black damp gas. Turner said rescuers actually came within 800 feet of the boys Thursday night but were forced back by the gas.

O'Kain explained that they had been in the mine before—"just a couple of days ago. I know I'll never go back."

Abbott said they never heard the rescuers until they were found. He said the time dragged, and they thought Saturday was Sunday.

T. J. McDonald, assistant superintendent of the U. S. Bureau of Mines, said the boys "were just sitting around" when they were located.

"They couldn't do anything else. They had to get tired in the low percentage of oxygen."

Not Miraculous

McDonald said the discovery of the boys alive was not too miraculous since persons have been found alive before in similar situations.

However, he added:

"When Mr. Turner called me, he was crying. Mr. Turner is my assistant, and I've never known him to be so emotional. In other words, he was shook up."

Turner himself said:

"I was more excited than the kids were and so was Jim (Hutchens)."

Turner said one of the boys said, when found, "I've got a terrific headache." He quoted another as saying, "I think I've got pneumonia."

Red China Awards Defected Nationalists

TOKYO (AP) — Communist China claimed Saturday that five Nationalist Chinese agents have been given money awards and jobs after surrendering and giving proof of "rendering service to the people."

Radio Peking said the ex-agents landed secretly, on orders of the U. S. Central Intelligence Agency, in coastal areas of South China's Kwangtung province last year.

oppose compulsory arbitration. Goldberg himself, however, is not likely to be named this time. The Chicago Daily News also learned that the delay in introduction of proposed legislation until July 22 was arranged at the request of Democratic congressional leaders, and was not an idea of the President. Few lawmakers on Capitol Hill say they are eager to grapple with legislation involving compulsory arbitration. For it is widely feared that any such law—even on a one-shot basis—might serve as a precedent that would jeopardize the nation's collective bargaining system.

Additionally, such legislation—which labor has vowed to oppose bitterly—could prove politically dangerous to its proponents.

Therefore congressional leaders asked for the delay until July 22, with any action that might lead to a strike postponed until July 29, on the outside chance that the dispute might somehow be settled by negotiations in the meantime.

Not for Mediation

themselves with glee over the recent tension in Chinese - Soviet relations. With a view to bringing about the failure of Chinese-Soviet talks and a split in the international communist movement, U.S. imperialism is fanning the flames and adding fuel to the fire. . . . Take a look at John F. Kennedy and one will see how intoxicated with joy this boss of U.S. imperialism is."

The Soviet Party statement laid bare its power struggle with Communist China, revealing for the first time the extent of its cut-back in aid to Peking, and stressed again that the President's special committee, now surveying the history of the so-called "featherbedding" dispute, was not set up as a mediation group.

Labor department officials have not ruled out the possibility that individual members of the committee—particularly the two management representatives—might attempt personal mediation.

But the chances for success of such impromptu efforts are rated "slight."

At the same time, all signs from Capitol Hill indicate rough rolling for any proposed legislation—even a version with compulsory arbitration "softened" with initial mediation.

House Minority Leader Charles Halleck (R-Ind.) said the lower chamber wasn't going to be "panicked" into railroading anything through.

Sen. Minority Leader Everett Dirksen (R-Ill.) went on record with the prediction that any compulsory arbitration bill would not get through Congress "without a long, hard fight."

said the letter discussed the week-long meeting of Soviet and Chinese representatives.

"The Chinese Communist Party representatives at this meeting continue aggravating the situation," the letter said.

"Despite this the Communist Party of the Soviet Union delegation displays a maximum of patience and self control, striving for the talks to yield positive results."

Erroneous Views

The Soviet communists accused the Chinese of seeking to "impose their dictate and their deeply erroneous views on the cardinal problems of our time" and on the rest of the communist movement.

The letter said Peking's attacks on Khrushchev's global strategy "cause increasing concern of the CPSU central committee."

The Soviet central committee declared the Russians and Chinese party leaders are diametrically opposed on approaches to "such most important problems as the possibility of preventing thermonuclear war, peaceful co-existence of states with different social systems, the interconnection between the struggle for peace and development of the world revolutionary movement."

Pravda not only published the Soviet letter, running over four solid pages, but published the massive Chinese letter of June 14 which struck at the heart of Kremlin policy in communist and world affairs. The two together ran to seven full pages.

The Kremlin had previously refused to publish the Chinese letter in the Soviet Union and had expelled five Chinese for having distributed copies of it in Moscow.

The Russians said it now could be published because the Soviet reply is ready and "everyone who will read the (Chinese) letter. . . will see behind the high-faluting phrases about unity and cohesion, unfriendly slanderous attacks on our party and the Soviet Union."

'Caucus' Becomes Key Word In Modern Legislative Life

Private Sessions Reduce Time of Public Debate on Chamber Floor

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

MADISON—Key word in the operation of the state legislature today is the "caucus."

A device which was scarcely used by the political parties in the legislature's deliberations until a decade and a half ago is now the basic tool in the proceedings, sometimes perplexing casual visitors in the legislative galleries, and frequently annoying critics who believe it is undermining to some degree the long Wisconsin tradition of open discussion and free publicity and communication.

In these closing days of the 1963 legislature, members in both legislative houses are spending more time behind the securely locked doors of their caucus rooms than chambers, voting upon and debating bills and resolutions.

It is perhaps the best example of the evolution of political institutions without acknowledgment in their formal rules. The caucus is entirely unofficial and informal. It has no standing in law. It has developed out of partisan convenience and necessity, with the willing consent of politicians on both sides of the political aisle, Republicans and Democrats.

On a typical day the majority party leader in both houses will ask for a recess in the house proceedings for the purpose of holding a caucus of his party members. Normally the minority party leader immediately announces a caucus of his followers.

The caucus in the legislature may be likened to the time out device in the football game. It affords an opportunity for reflection, for study, sometimes for the resting of heated tempers. It permits a discussion of tactics and strategy beyond the prying eyes and listening ears of the opposition politicians. It affords party leaders an opportunity to remonstrate with recalcitrants and doubters, to explain the importance of purely partisan legislation, to develop the "plays" on the floor that will be executed against the opposition.

In earlier decades of this century legislative parties held caucuses also, but infrequently. A quarter of a century ago a weekly caucus was typical, and it was usually held in the evening. Topics were the major issues. On lesser questions members were expected to follow the leader on the floor, without private instructions or guidance.

Today caucuses are held on the daily calendars of the houses, and sometimes there are several sessions in the course of a single day.

Caucus Defense

Politicians defend the more intensive use of private discussion meeting on several grounds. It provides an opportunity for the more timid or inexperienced members to ask questions and to make comments that they would hesitate to make on the floor. It tends to reduce the volume of debate during the formal sessions of the houses. It permits a better use of the special talents of some of the members. Standing committee chairmen for example, tend to be those men with most seniority. But they may not be the most effective workers or the most qualified exponents on some issues or proposals.

But there are objections also. Because there is a tendency to explore the issues with reasonable adequacy in the privacy of the caucus rooms, there is less debate and explanation on the floor for the benefit of legislative reporters and other sideline observers, and therefore less communication to the public.

The responsibility of the caucus for decisions and leadership has tended to reduce the committee chairmen to nominal rank. In earlier times the committee chairman was expected to lead the discussions in his special field of interest. Today he is under no such duty. Issues have been thoroughly explored before measures hit the floor.

Perhaps the most serious criticism of the excessive reliance upon the caucus method of deliberations in the legislature is that it has permitted the indifferent or indolent legislator to shirk his work with impunity. There is no longer a necessity, some feel, to spend time reading the piles of bills submitted in each session. Whatever is really important or likely to get serious consideration caucus leaders of both parties will be explored in the caucus and have had their own staffs, for the first time in history. A pending enactment will authorize such services the year around, including the months when the legislature is not in formal session.

At the same time, with a grant of funds from one of the national foundations, the legislature is studying the advisability of arranging for specialized professional assistants for some of its major committees, including the joint committee on finance which handles the state budget and tax legislation.

The evolution of legislative auxiliary bureaus is commonly accepted as the result of the increasing complexity of modern life, the growth of the state and the expansion of government, all of which have lengthened legislative sessions and imposed greater responsibilities upon the individual legislator who works part time for a part-time salary.

Conversely, the current reliance upon the caucus for the development of policy has reduced the public role of the party quarterbacks, the floorleaders of the parties in the open sessions.

Today the floorleaders do most of their argument and persuasion behind closed doors. When they have reached a consensus, they return to the chambers and call the parliamentary signals. In earlier eras the floorleaders were expected to exercise more initiative and to persuade their party associates of their partisan interests

Two Appraisers Named to Put Value on Land

Reformatory Acreage Will be Sold in Town of Allouez

Post-Crescent Madison Bureau

MADISON—Two appraisers have been named by the state department of public welfare to put a value on 59 acres of state reformatory farm land in the town of Allouez, Brown County, which the legal legislature has authorized to be sold to the Allouez school board as a school construction site.

59 Acres

Sanger Powers, director of the state division of corrections, said he will present the appraisers' value figures to the state building commission at a meeting the next two months as a preliminary for the formal offer of sale to the school district.

The land comprises about 59 acres, including 15 acres of low-land which is not needed for the school site, but which would be separated from the rest of the farm acreage and which would therefore have no further value to the state.

The land to be sold for school purposes would be east of Greenwood street extended, and between that street and East River.

Powers explained that the legislature's authorization for the sale of the entire reformatory farm acreage was merely permissive, and that the balance of the land won't be sold until the department completes its plans for the development of a reformatory agricultural enterprise at an alternative location, not yet chosen.

Require Some Time

Such planning may require some time, he said. But the division is convinced that ultimately the farming enterprise must be removed from the Allouez residential district, a conviction that was endorsed in effect when the legislative visiting committee sponsored the reformatory land sale bill. The appraisers' value figure on the 59 acres desired by the Town of Allouez won't necessarily be the sales price. The local school board will have the right to reject the offer, as it chooses.

Doctor Says Pills

Only Delay Ovulation

OXFORD, England (AP)—A doctor said Friday a woman who takes contraceptive pills for much of her life might find herself an expectant mother about the time she was drawing an old age pension.

Dr. L. Kopelowitz told a meeting of the British Medical Association "now evidence has been put before us that there is a possibility that they only delay ovulation."

ductivity is much below Western levels. Also, the population, now numbering 13.8 million, is getting overage.

At the same time, the number of legal abortions per year stays above the 100,000 mark despite a tightening of the laws. Last year, there was still one abortion for every birth in Prague. The capital's population figure has reached a million, but only because outsiders moved into the city. Since 1957 the death rate has been higher than the birth rate, despite an all-time low in infant mortality.

Economic Reasons

What's behind all this? Usually the question will get a frank answer. In most cases it boils down to something like this:

"I'd love to have a baby but we just cannot afford it. 'Both of us have to work if we want to have some extra money.' 'We are trying to get an apartment first.' 'We would like to have a car first.'"

The answers probably would be similar from many young couples in the West. The differences is that many people in Czechoslovakia will have to repeat these answers for many years.

Auxiliaries to Legislature Being Built

Trend Is Toward More Direct Staff Services for Solons

Post-Crescent Madison Bureau

MADISON — The state legislature is rapidly building its own permanent establishment of advisers, functionaries and managers.

The approving signatures of Gov. John W. Reynolds upon a measure putting the Legislative Reference Library and the office of the Revisor of Statutes under the direct jurisdiction of the legislature underlines a trend for the development of an independent legislative series of auxiliary services. The two agencies were established many decades ago, but were always under the control of other agencies.

Recent Trend

The action is in line with a recently developing trend for more direct staff services for committee and legislative leaders. Recently, for example, legislative caucus leaders of both parties will be explored in the caucus and have had their own staffs, for the first time in history. A pending enactment will authorize such services the year around, including the months when the legislature is not in formal session.

At the same time, with a grant of funds from one of the national foundations, the legislature is studying the advisability of arranging for specialized professional assistants for some of its major committees, including the joint committee on finance which handles the state budget and tax legislation.

Joint Legislative Council

The legislature already has as its chief source of advisory assistance and research service the joint legislative Council. Some observers are predicting that ultimately the revisor, the reference library and the council will be brought together under a single director.

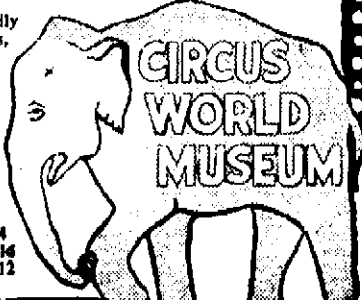

The evolution of legislative auxiliary bureaus is commonly accepted as the result of the increasing complexity of modern life, the growth of the state and the expansion of government, all of which have lengthened legislative sessions and imposed greater responsibilities upon the individual legislator who works part time for a part-time salary.
